'L' CARS TO RUN TONIGHT!

HOPE IN PARLEY AS COAL CRISIS GROWS ACUTE

Local Industry Near Famine's Edge.

BULLETIN.

Pana, Ill., Aug. 5.—(Special.)—Evidence of early resumption of coal mining in central Illinois was seen today when fires were kindled under boilers of two big mines of the Indiana-Illinois Coal corporation at Witt, both mines having been sealed Jan. 1 last. Improvements on the Taylor Springs mine of the same corporation are being rushed.

BULLETIN.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 5.—(By the Associated Press.)—State Fuel Administrator Robert M. Medill was optimistic this morning that Illinois coal mines will be working within a week or ten days. He declared his belief that President Lewis of the United Mine Workers will reach an interstate agreement with independent coal operators at Cleveland on Monday, and thereupon issue an order directing miners to return to work.

BY ARTHUR EVANS.

Peace in the coal strike seems to hinge largely upon tomorrow's miners-producers' conference, called at Cleveland by John L. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers. So operators viewed it yesterday as Chicago awoke with a start, feeling the first pinches of a fuel famine.

Acceptance by Illinois miners of the offer of the Illinois operators to reopen at the old wage scale, which should be kept in effect until next April 1, and submission of the whole matter of wages and working conditions to an arbitration board of men outside the industry, was deemed by Frank Farrington, head of the state miners, to hang upon results of the Cleveland parley. At this meeting a minority of the tonnage of the four states in the central competitive field will be represented, the big producers' organizations of Pittsburgh, Indiana, Illinois, and part of Ohio having declined the invitation to attend, but nevertheless it is expected to be pivotal.

Expect Separate Agreements.

One general belief among the producers seemed to be that the final outcome would be separate state agreements, under which the men would return under the old scale. One theory was that these agreements would be in the nature of adjustments to whatever understanding is reached at Cleveland. The big stumbling block ever since the controversy started has been whether settlement should be on a "four state" basis, as of old, or by separate state contracts.

Some observers point out that the Cleveland meeting may give the unions at least the semblance of a "four state" agreement, although the big producers refuse to participate. The national policy committee of the unions might then possibly allow adjustments by states, which has been done before, the adjustments to be submitted for approval to the national organizations.

As some producers view it, whichever way it swings the likelihood now is that when the men go back it will be at the old wage rates instead of with pay cuts—before the mine suspension the men expected to take some wage reduction. In itself this would be quite a victory for the miners.

Arbitration May Be Feature.

One prevalent rumor yesterday was that Mr. Lewis may suggest to the Cleveland conference that a wage scale be made with "reasonable reductions," and that there be no submission of wages and the check-off to arbitration, but that all other disputed points be left to an arbitration commission appointed by President Harding. This report was widely spread, but no direct corroboration of it came from high union officials.

Taking it as hypothesis, however, it is conjectured that the next step after the action at Cleveland may be pressure from the national administration with a view of getting the majority of operators to follow along. Then, in due process, action by the national policy committee for an adjustment agreement, subject to approval of Mr. Lewis and his colleagues.

Meanwhile, Chicago awoke to an unusual situation. The "economic [illegible]" for which the miners have been waiting ever since April 1 began [illegible] as the mine suspension, after four and a half months, started to

AVENUE FLIRT IS FLEET ON FEET; GIRLS FLEETER

Old time movie comedies always carried a "chase scene" as a finale. Such a chase last night resulted in the arrest of Wilbur Rogers, 35 years old, 822 South Wabash avenue, for flirting.

Rogers accosted Miss Mabel Hoffman, 24 years old, 4705 Bernard street, and Miss Alice McCann, 18 years old, same address, on Michigan boulevard near the Auditorium hotel.

They slapped his face, he ran; the girls pursued and were joined by a crowd. Thence the parade route was Van Buren street to Wabash avenue, thence back to Michigan avenue, through the lobby of the Auditorium hotel, to Congress and Michigan and thence into Grant park. South Park Policeman James Bohn captured him.

CITY'S BUILDING SMASHES RECORD

Permits for 7 Months More than Any Whole Year.

This is the biggest building year in the history of Chicago.

Permits for the construction of $127,712,000 worth of buildings—residences, apartment buildings, office buildings, factories, and other structures—have been issued during the first seven months of the year. That is more than has ever been spent for buildings in any twelve months heretofore. The 1922 total may reach $175,000,000.

Comparison of Values.

The high mark heretofore was last years record was $125,004,510. The previous high mark was that of 1916, when permits for $112,835,150 worth of buildings were issued. The total for 1920 was only $79,102,650 and for the first seven months last year, $66,554,000.

In seven months this year permits for 3,904 residences and 2,238 apartment buildings have been taken out, according to the seven-month building report of Building Commissioner Bostrom. These permits mean approximately 13,500 new homes, as compared with 4,566 acquired during the first seven months of 1921.

Expect Total to Set Mark.

It seems probable, with 7,569 permits for buildings of all kinds issued in seven months, that this year will top the previous records for number of permits issued. This record is held by the year 1910, when 11,409 permits were issued.

The following table of permits gives in figures the facts which builders claim assure at least a small dent in Chicago rents:

	1921 [12 Mos.]	1921 [7 Mos.]	1922 [7 Mos.]
Residences	4,622	2,326	3,904
Apartments	1,453	521	2,238
Industries	1,294	622	1,005
Others	384	148	422
Total Permits..	7,753	3,617	7,569
Frontage	230,626	104,543	283,940

One interesting fact gleaned from a survey of the city's building history is that in 1892 the average cost per building was about $5,000; in 1919 it was approximately $17,000; in 1921 it established the present record, with $18,670, and thus far this year it has eased off to $16,870 per structure.

LAWYER PLUNGES 5 STORIES FROM HOSPITAL ROOM

Fighting off his frantic wife, who had been admitted to see him in his room at the Presbyterian hospital, Morgan Davies, an attorney from Dixon, Ill., hurled himself from his fifth story window. His injuries are expected to be fatal.

Since July 26 the attorney had been in the hospital under observation and treatment for "mental disturbances."

Davies carried the screen with him in his plunge to the pavement of Hermitage avenue. His injuries included a broken leg, several cuts and bruises, and probable internal injuries.

Asa Bacon, assistant superintendent, and others, responding to Mrs. Davies' cries, picked up the attorney and carried him to the operating table.

HARDING HEARS SHOPS CHIEFS, "BIG 3" ENVOYS

May Call Executives In Tomorrow.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—President Harding today conferred with leaders of the striking union shopmen and later with legislative representatives of three of the four railway brotherhoods which had communicated with him yesterday regarding the condition of rolling stock.

No reports were made public of what took place at either meeting, as the President had asked the union men not to discuss the conferences.

It was rumored, however, that the President might call railway executives to Washington early next week as a result of the conferences and because of labor views over the seniority question, which is the point most at issue and which, it is said, the President has suggested be settled by the rail labor board.

Insist on Seniority.

It is understood that if the seniority question is to be determined by the rail labor board it must be made before the men return to work.

The labor board's resolution of July 3 declaring that the strikers, having left their employment, are no longer under the board's jurisdiction must be repealed before they will consent to intrusting their side of the seniority issue before it. In other words, if the strikers in their acceptance of President Harding's conditions agree to abide by the decisions of the railroad labor board the board must formally acknowledge that the striking shopmen are within its jurisdiction.

Meets Strikers' Leaders.

The President first saw Bert M. Jewell, head of the shop crafts unions; W. H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists, and James P. Noonan, president of the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. These three men represented the unions now actually involved in the strike. They are understood to have informed Mr. Harding that they stood pat on their declaration of acceptance of the President's peace plan which they made in Chicago several days ago.

It has been suggested upon good authority for the last few days that the President, as his next move in the strike situation, would invite the strikers to return to work and leave the question of seniority to the railroad labor board.

May Reopen Issue.

This gave rise to some speculation that the President might ask the railroad labor board to reopen the seniority question at once and render a decision on the issue.

The President conferred also with H. E. Wills, assistant grand chief of the Brotherhood of Engineers; Paul Stephenson, representing the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and Arthur J. Lovell, representing the Brotherhood of Firemen and Enginemen. These brotherhoods telegraphed the President from Cleveland yesterday urging him to renew his efforts to end the strike and warning of the danger of increasing "bad order" rolling stock.

Information About Equipment.

It is understood that Wills, Stephenson, and Lovell furnished the president with more details concerning the condition of locomotives and cars.

Wills said after the conference that there was no likelihood of a sympathetic strike on the part of the engineers. His conference with the President, he said, could be construed as exactly the opposite.

Fitzgerald Wires Harding.

A new development of the strike came today when E. H. Fitzgerald of Cincinnati, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Station, and Express Employés wired the President for a conference to "prevent further fatalities to our membership on account of defective equipment and armed guards in shops and yards."

It was said that Fitzgerald's brotherhood was supported in this move by executives of the telegraphers, maintenance of way men's, signalmen's, and train dispatchers' unions.

None of these organizations is on strike.

A meeting scheduled for today between shopmen chairmen of the Southern railway and executives of that road was postponed until Monday. The Southern, it is said, is offering to meet the shopmen's terms and wants to negotiate a separate settlement.

30 Reported Dead, 50 Hurt in Rail Wreck

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—Thirty persons were reported killed and fifty injured tonight at Sulphur Springs, Mo., twenty-six miles south of here, when Missouri Pacific passenger train No. 4 crashed into passenger train No. 32 of the same road.

Train No. 32 was en route from Hoxie, Ark., to St. Louis, and stopped at Sulphur Springs to take on water, when train No. 4, en route from Fort Worth, Tex., to St. Louis, crashed into the rear end, telescoping the coaches of the first train.

No. 32 was composed of seven coaches and No. 4 of twelve steel coaches.

Several of the coaches of the first train were pushed into a creek and some of the passengers are said to have been drowned. A number of Boy Scouts were on the Hoxie train.

Engineer Matt Glenn of train No. 4 was killed instantly. He resided in St. Louis.

Calls have been sent out for assistance and a Missouri Pacific relief train has been rushed to the scene of the disaster from here.

57 YEAR SEARCH BY MOTHER ENDS IN ARMS OF SON

Columbus, O., Aug. 5.—[United Press.]—A mother and son, who have searched for each other since the week following the Civil war, were to be reunited here today.

Persistent newspaper advertising by the mother, Mrs. Mary Margaret Roper, 80, of Kansas City, Mo., finally brought out the fact that her son, Joseph, 62, was living in Columbus.

A week after the Civil war ended, Mrs. Roper's husband left their home in Springfield, O., with their two children, Joseph and Charles. The mother at once instituted a search for the trio.

Recently one of her advertisements in Ohio newspapers was answered. Her husband, she learned, has been dead thirty years and the other son, Charles, has been missing for an equal length of time.

Finding of her son gives Mrs. Roper identification as the wife of a former Civil war veteran and entitles her to $10,000 in back pension payments.

NIGHT GUARD'S BRAVERY SAVES 5 FROM FUMES

Five men were almost asphyxiated and three others were slightly gassed last night when an ammonia pipe in the Roberts & Oake packing plant, 45th street and Racine avenue, burst and filled the place with fumes.

That the five were not killed was due to the bravery of Daniel Leahy, a watchman. Leahy, apprised of the accident shortly after it occurred, wet his handkerchief, tied it around his mouth, and nose, and dashed into the gas filled room. One by one he dragged the five forth and then called the stockyards police. Three others who were in the room were able to make their own way to safety.

The workmen were installing a new refrigerator in the building. The cause of the accident is not known.

BOTH UNIONS VOTE TODAY ON 10 CENTS CUT

Leaders Confident Men Will Accept.

Elevated train service throughout the city may be resumed as early as 7 o'clock this evening. Trains should be moving by midnight at the latest.

Surface cars on all lines will leave the barns at 4 o'clock tomorrow morning for the first time in six days.

This forecast takes for granted that both unions, by referendum vote today, will accept the new wage contracts proposed by the companies. Their leaders think there is virtually no doubt about it.

The street car men will vote between 6 a. m. and 4 p. m. at the sixteen barns upon the 70 cent wage agreement reached Friday night between officials of Division 241 and the board of control of the Chicago Surface Lines. The agreement received the indorsement yesterday of the union's executive board of thirty-two members.

"L" Men Vote on 72 Cents.

The "L" employés will vote between 7 a. m. and 3 p. m. on a 72 cent wage contract agreed upon yesterday by Britton I. Budd, president of the Chicago Elevated Railways, and the officers and executive committee of Division 308, the "L" employés' organization. This agreement also provides for the retention of the eight hour day and all present working rules.

The new wage scale for elevated trainmen follows:

	First 3 Mos.	Next 9 Mos.	After 1 Year.
Motormen	66 cents	67 cents	72 cents
Conductors	65 cents	65 cents	66 cents
Extra guards.....	62 cents	63 cents	64 cents

Regular guards will receive 65 cents an hour after one year's service and the pay for towermen will range from 75 to 79 cents an hour. All these figures carry a flat 10 cent reduction. All other classes of "L" employés will receive wage reductions in the same ratio, approximately 12.2 per cent.

Effective on Sept. 1.

According to an agreement reached between the elevated union and Mr. Budd prior to the walkout, the new scale will not become effective prior to Sept. 1. On that date, it is rumored, the elevated company voluntarily will announce a 1 cent reduction in the fare rate, which is now 10 cents, or four tickets from 35 cents.

Mr. Budd met with William Mylan and William S. McClenathan, president and secretary, respectively, of the "L" men's union, and with the employés' executive committee composed of Miss Elizabeth Corrigan, Lawrence Tobin, William Brittingham, James McArdle, and Patrick H. Feeney. After the wage question was settled the union committee agreed that the trains would be manned and operated as soon as possible after the tabulation of the votes today.

Will Await Surface Men's Count.

The hour, according to Secretary McClenathan, however, will depend upon the time consumed in counting the street car men's ballots. No trains will be run, he said, until his organization is formally notified by the surface car men's union that they have accepted the new agreement.

The "L" employés' union has only about 5,000 members, and as the polls close at 3 o'clock the result should be known by 4 or 5 o'clock. The street car men's polls do not close until 4, however, and as that organization has about 15,000 members, more time probably will be consumed in tabulating the ballots.

Allowing two hours for counting the votes and another hour for the first "L" crews to reach the barns trains can be run as early as 7 o'clock. Delay in announcing the vote by the street car men's officers, however, will place resumption of "L" service later.

Conservatives in Majority.

Although there is a division in the ranks of the surface car men on acceptance of the 70 cent wage, the conservative element representing the majority by a safe margin, is strongly in favor of a settlement. The officers of the union issued another appeal to the men to accept it and the stewards spent the day trying to win over recalcitrants with verbal arguments at the various temporary strike headquarters.

Following their return to their west side headquarters, the "L" committee also issued a statement appealing to their members to end the strike today. They announced the votes will be cast at the following places: 307 East 61st street, 63rd street and Racine avenue, Clark street and Belmont avenue, Logan Square L station, 1611 North Kedzie avenue, 1616 South

Cicero avenue and 4016 West Lake street.

"Just as soon as our vote is counted and the surface men's vote is tabulated and we know the results, the men will be back at work," said Secretary McClenathan. "That is, if the vote comes out that way, of course. All I can say as to the hour is that the service may be going full swing before 10 o'clock tomorrow night."

President Mylan said it might be possible to have trains in operation between 7 and 8 o'clock.

Slow Return to Normalcy.

At the offices of the Chicago Surface lines it was stated that street car service probably will not get back to normalcy for a week or so because of the fact that thousands have bought commutation tickets on railroad lines and will use this means of transportation at least until their tickets are used up.

"It has been our experience in the past that it takes some time for the traffic to become normal again after a strike," said one official. "Aside from those who use the railroads there are always a number of others who find temporary means of transportation to which they cling for at least a certain period."

Lines Issue Statement.

Henry A. Blair, president of the company, spent the morning at his desk arranging the details for resuming operation and then left for the golf links. Attaches of his office gave him a large share of the credit for reaching a settlement Friday night. The following brief statement was issued by the company:

"A summary of the surface lines figures for the period covered by the 7 cent fare, three for 20 cents order, June 15 to July 31, during which the 80 cents per hour wage rate has been in effect, shows gross revenue of $6,791,740; expenses, including taxes, $6,005,866; balance, $785,874.

No 55 Per Cent for City.

"The 5 per cent interest on the purchase price (capital account) which the companies are permitted under the ordinances to deduct before settling with the city amounts to $1,034,839. So that the residue receipts, $785,874, fall short of meeting this 5 per cent interest allowance by $248,965. There will be, therefore, no 55 per cent for the city and no 45 per cent for the companies.

"This indicates, among other things, that the 'donation of its 55 per cent by the city,' which is suggested occasionally as one method of improving the financial situation, is not helpful when there are no divisible receipts, as is the case in the period covered by the above statement.

"The rate of return which the companies realize from the $785,874 difference between receipts and expenditures works out at 3.79 per cent on the capital valuation, considerably short of the amount necessary to meet the bond interest—not to mention the fact that nothing whatever is left for the stockholders."

Mayor Still Talks Busses.

Mayor Thompson returned to the city yesterday with Gov. Small and announced that the strike will have no effect on his plans to compete with the street car company by operating a 5 cent bus line. He plans to add to his fleet of thirteen borrowed busses, he said, until they will be competing with all street car lines by November.

Corporation Counsel Samuel A. Ettelson attributed the early settlement of the strike to the mayor's busses.

"There is one thing that settled the strike," he said, pointing out of the window at one of the busses. "Our promise to settle the ticket question and the fact that Mr. Blair was subpoenaed to come to the city hall and tell his story to the industrial commission were other contributing factors."

State Inquiry Postponed.

On motion of Harry P. Weber, counsel for the Chicago Surface lines, the inquiry which was to have been launched by the state industrial commission was postponed until tomorrow. Attorney Weber explained a settlement had been effected, that the men are to vote today, and that it would be best to await the result of this vote. With the men back at work there will no longer be need of the investigation.

LANDIS AWARD WORKER BEATEN BY 5 GANGSTERS

Henry C. Sutton of 216 East 21st street, a carpenter working under the Landis award scale, was beaten last night by five men, one of them a Negro, while he was walking in Clark street near West Lake street. The men fled after knocking Sutton down. Police took him to the Iroquois Memorial hospital.

HERE IS SOME INSULLATED TRACTION NEWS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS, Aug. 5.—"It is true there is no 'straphanging in Paris, but that is because Parisians prefer to walk," Samuel Insull of Chicago smilingly told THE TRIBUNE today. "Another reason is that it costs more in Paris to ride street cars. The company prevents crowding by keeping the fares high."

Mr. Insull has been rambling through the British Isles, including the Shetland Islands for several weeks, and he visited his birthplace in London. And he has not ridden on a single street car since his arrival in Europe.

Mr. Insull dined at the Ritz tonight with T. P. O'Connor, who is enroute to Vichy for the annual cure.

German Children Cared For by Relatives in U. S.

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Thousands of German children are being supported, many of them adopted and brought to this country, by wealthier relatives who reside here, according to Joseph Hutter, who has a restaurant in Chicago and was on Ellis island today with a niece he had brought from the fatherland. The child is Josefina Wettenmann, 14, daughter of Hutter's sister, who lives in Munich.

"It has become a sort of systematized fad among German-Americans," Hutter said, "to take care of one or two children for their relatives in the old country until things get brighter in Germany.

"There is a joint committee in this country through which arrangements are made for the support and education of thousands of German children by individuals benevolently inclined."

CITY RETURNS TO REGULAR TRAFFIC SYSTEM TODAY

One-Way Street Plan Is Up to Council.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

Normal traffic regulations will be resumed today in the loop and Chicago boulevards. The permanent adoption of the one-way street plan, which has operated to the entire satisfaction of all local transportation authorities, is freely predicted by police department officials, but it can be ordered only after the council transportation committee acts favorably upon it and recommends like action by the Illinois commerce commission.

On Monday street cars will resume their old routes through loop streets and all restrictions other than the parking regulations will be removed.

Sold on One-way Plan.

"I am thoroughly sold on the one-way street system for Chicago," said Chief Fitzmorris yesterday, but I find that I haven't the power as a police official to force a rerouting of street cars in order to make it practical. This can be done only by the Illinois commerce commission. It should be advocated by every interest in the city, it seems to me, and brought immediately to the attention of the council transportation committee. Otherwise the traffic will continue to be the same old city problem, and increasing use of automobiles due to the strike experience will add to the general congestion."

As a reward for their emergency services the chief plans to resume his departmental vacation schedule at once, cutting down the loop traffic service to a minimum today in order to allow the men who were called in from vacations and those whose time off should have begun last week to get away at once.

Rerouting of Cars.

Traffic experts under the direction of Commissioner William H. Reid of the public service division began yesterday drafting detailed surveys and reports on the loop and boulevard scheme which served strike transportation and on plans for the rerouting of surface cars to follow the chief's suggestion.

"I am still doubtful concerning the success of the one-way plan when the cars resume business," said Maj. R. F. Keiker. "Even when cars are routed one way over the double tracks they will take up 50 per cent of the traffic space and will have to make both left and right hand turns. The scheme may relieve congestion, however, and serve until that long needed subway brings a semblance of efficiency to the Chicago traffic system.

"The one big lesson the traffic experts learned from the strike is that Chicago needs a subway and needs it at once. That is the only way out. The city cannot afford to widen streets in the downtown district, but it can afford to make room for the street cars beneath the streets."

Additional schemes for the improved handling of traffic on boulevards and through streets are also being worked out by various agencies to be submitted to the city and park boards. It is expected that signal lights will soon be installed at loop intersections to synchronize the traffic movements, following the trial of the indicator at State and Madison streets.

Mosquitoes Bite Canaries; Send 'Em to Hospitals

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Mosquitoes this summer, invading New York in unprecedented numbers, have found a new victim in the domesticated canary.

A woman physician explained what many canary owners had thought was a baffling malady, bringing restlessness and songlessness to even the best of songsters.

"It's the mosquitoes," she said. "They've taken a fancy this year to canary legs. We have hundreds. Every bird hospital in New York is filled with the victims. We estimate that more than 100,000 birds have been attacked."

MUSIC HATH CHARMS—EVEN IN STRIKE

"Ain't we got fun?" is the spirit in which Kirk Soap company employes regard the street car strike. With their four piece band they make the home trip a picnic. The camera caught them as they left the Michigan avenue plant yesterday.

U. S. CHARGES 4 STOLE EVIDENCE FOR BOOZE RING

Two New York Men Had Documents.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—A wholesale theft of legal documents from the internal revenue department pertaining to advanced information and evidence against the largest liquor interests in seven states was cleared up today in the arrest of four men, including two agents of the revenue department, a New York lawyer, and a salesman from the metropolis.

Released on $25,000 Bond.

On eight criminal charges each of the two New York men were released on $25,000 bond following a preliminary hearing. They are Attorney Max H. Halperen, alias Halpen, 28, and Merrill Steinsfels, alias Stenburg and Steinfels, 40 years old. The two agents, Ivan P. Pennyworth and William R. J. Hayden, employed in the bureau of internal revenue, turned state's evidence. They were released.

When trapped in their room at the Racquet club the two New York men were found to be in possession of hundreds of alleged stolen documents. Some were hidden underneath the cushions of chairs, while others were concealed under tables.

Going on a Month, Claim.

That the robbery of the documents had been going on for nearly a month and that they were used by the two New Yorkers to prevent government prosecution of liquor interests is the accusation made by the government agents.

After getting documents from Pennyworth and Hayden, government agents declare, Halperen and Steinsfels would get in touch with the concerns interested and upon consideration of money they would either dispose of the documents or place them out of the reach of government agents. Officials declare they were deriving a large amount of revenue from the recognized liquor trusts.

Woman Identifies Man as Auto Purse Snatcher

One of the three men taken in custody by Police Lieut. William O'Connor yesterday was positively identified by Mrs. Martha Martinakus, 556 West 39th street, as being one of three men who leaped from a motor car at 39th street and Stewart avenue and robbed her of a handbag containing $50. The man identified is John Walsh, 5700 South Bishop street. Mrs. Martinakus was unable to identify Samuel Shapiro, 4309 South Halsted street, and Charles Foley, the others taken.

LOOP OFFICE FULL OF GOOD BOOZE AND BAD POETRY RAIDED

Backward, turn backward, O Time, in thy flight,
Bring me again a cold stein of the light;
Give me the pretzel and Swiss cheese on rye,
Bring me the pig's knuckle for which I sigh.
Bring me the screen that once stood by the door,
Show me the apron the barkeep once wore,
Only once more, without fear of the jail,
Let me tilt my head back with my foot on the rail.

A list of thirty "customers," with entries of $6 after their names, a "menu" of liquor containing all varieties, and the verses above were found by prohibition agents in a raid on room 416, Adams Express building, yesterday afternoon.

The door bears the inscription, "James Walsh, Manufacturing Selling Agents." The prohibition men declared the selling was restricted to booze.

Two possible "customers," giving their names as W. A. Swan and J. H. Thompson, appeared during the raid. So did a mail man, who beat a hasty exit. Walsh was not present, and the raiders camped to wait for him. Investigation of the cash box showed that business was good. One "Doc" Gorton, however, was charged up with $57.80.

Another "customer" found in the place gave his name as Henry C. Woodruff "of the chief's office" and flashed a police star. A man told the dry agents that the man's right name was Charles Herford.

Mrs. Frank Lowden Sues Pullman Tenant for Rent

Suit against George Szeztynski, 9209 rent for a tenement in Pullman, Ill., was filed yesterday in the Municipal court by Mrs. Frank O. Lowden. The tenant claimed that he had not paid last year's rent because the place was Woodlawn avenue, for $171.50 back not habitable.

Camp Grant Auctions Total $557,000; Shoes Out of Sale

Rockford, Ill., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Camp Grant's two day auction sale totaled $557,000. Seven million dollars worth of material was listed for sale, but much of it was withdrawn by the government. Among the withdrawals was 1,000,000 pairs of shoes.

MAIL ORDER GUNS PEDDLED IN CITY; SALESMAN HELD

Mail order gun companies are now vending their wares through peddlers working the thug warrens of metropolitan cities, according to Sheffield avenue police last night after they arrested a gun salesman.

Sergt. Jerome Reynolds questioned Joseph Tonkevich, 2150 Pierce avenue, at Clybourne and Fullerton avenues, then searched a small valise he carried.

Four ugly looking revolvers and a big supply of ammunition were disclosed. Tonkevich claims to represent the Paramount Novelty company of New York, the biggest mail order gun company in the country. He had sold six guns and taken orders for four more in his brief career as a gun "runner."

THIRSTY YANKS MAY FIND OASIS IN OLD LOUISIANA

BY FLOYD GIBBONS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Aug. 5.—All that part of the United States comprised in the Louisiana purchase has the inalienable right to import and drink as much French wine, champagne, and liqueurs as it chooses, according to Mrs. Chauncey Olcott, wife of the actor. She bases her statement on the French-American archives, which she says disclose that "at the time the United States made the Louisiana purchase from France it was specifically stated in a treaty between the governments that the French would have the perpetual right to import all kinds of spirits in this territory."

Search French Archives.

Mrs. Olcott said she discovered this in old American records. The agreement has been lost sight of for many decades.

Being an active worker against the eighteenth amendment, she has come to France to coöperate with the French Wine Growers' association in searching French archives concerning the Louisiana purchase. If the French have a clear case against America she will suggest that the wine growers urge French diplomatic appeal.

Three Cocktails Daily.

Mrs. Olcott's delving in the dusty old archives for the last two days has resulted in very interesting discoveries already.

"My husband didn't drink a drop until he was 46 years old," she said. "Now he drinks three cocktails daily. That's why I'm against prohibition. They are so good in Paris that he is drinking more than that here."

Are Your Children Undernourished?
Their Weight Will Tell
Mothers are just discovering that undernourishment is not confined to the children of the poor; that the carefully reared children of wealthy homes are as frequently underweight as are the children in poorer districts. They are realising how imperative it is to watch their children's weight constantly, to insure normal growth and health.
The only really safe thing to do is to have, in your own home, a thoroughly reliable scale, on which you can weigh your children at regular intervals, under uniform conditions. In this way, the least deficiency in weight will be instantly noted, and suitable diet and care can be given to counteract it.
Fairbanks Health Scale
Fairbanks Scales (Fairbanks, Morse & Co., Chicago) have been, for several generations, the standard of weighing accuracy. The Fairbanks Health Scale is made especially for home use. It is absolutely dependable; convenient; compact; occupying but little space; standing flat against the wall or in a corner of the bathroom; attractive in appearance; finished in white enamel and nickel. A convenient measuring rod enables you to keep a record of the child's growth in height as well as weight.
Every member of the family should use this scale as a safeguard of health. Convenient tables of weights for babies, children and adults can be had in our interesting new department, where an experienced trained nurse can give you suggestions on building or reducing weight and its importance in maintaining health.
Fairbanks Baby Scale
Should be in every home where there is a young baby. It is a marvel of exactness, weighing accurately to the quarter of an ounce; recording the slightest gain or loss in baby's weight. Beautifully finished in white enamel, with convenient large scoop. Easily converted into a household scale.

IRISH FOES GIVE TERMS FOR END OF CIVIL WAR

Dublin Demands Rebels Obey Parliament.

BY JOHN CURRAN.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

CORK, Aug. 5.—The People's Rights association has been agitating for an armistice and has put questions to Michael Collins to which he gave emphatic reply today. Gen. Liam Lynch, head of the irregulars at Cork, wrote to the Cork association:

"When the provisional government cease their attack on us then defensive action on our part can cease. If the Second Dail, which is the government of the republic, or any other elected assembly will carry on such government, I see no difficulty as to the allegiance of the army."

Writes to Collins.

The association then wrote to Michael Collins: "Do you agree to arrange for such cessation of hostilities as Gen. Liam Lynch intimates he is prepared to accept? Do you agree to call forthwith a meeting of the Second Dail, to be followed by a meeting of the Third Dail as previously arranged, and allow a sovereign assembly of the people to decide on the necessity or policy of a bitter, prolonged civil war?"

Mr. Collins in replying says that these questions are for the government. He and the army will act under orders of the government which has made clear its desire is of course obedience and proper authority.

"When the irregular leaders obey, then armed conflict will no longer be necessary," Mr. Collins said. "The government's first duty is to secure citizens' rights until they are assured, and the government cannot rest. The rule of guns and the shameless attacks on property must cease. If they do not, then we are a discredited people."

Free State Reply.

The government in a separate memorandum replies to the Cork association's queries as follows:

"The irregulars' actions are wrongly described as defensive. The existence of an armed body claiming independent authority and committing outrages on persons and property cannot be tolerated. The functions of the Second Dail ended on June 30. The meeting which should have taken place on that date would be merely formal for the purpose of concluding its business.

"The sovereign assembly of Ireland now is the parliament elected in June —the authority of which the irregulars have defied. The present military action of the government is to enforce obedience to parliament. It will cease only when that obedience is unequivocally given. There must be no misunderstanding as to what obedience connotes—namely: surrender to the national armory of all war materials, restoration of seized property and money, and particulars furnished as to which bridges, roads and railways have been mined or rendered unsafe."

Capture of Kilmallock.

LIMERICK, Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—National army troops occupied Kilmallock, an important republican stronghold, this morning after having captured Adare, ten miles from this city, last night, it was officially announced here today.

The capture of Kilmallock was preceded by desperate fighting throughout yesterday and last night, and news of its occupation had been expected hourly this morning.

High explosive shells rained on the irregulars' position on a hill outside the town all day yesterday, and they were forced to evacuate it. Afterwards the republicans sought by means of sniping and ambushes to delay the advance of the national forces.

The Gortboy barracks on the edge of Kilmallock was destroyed by shell fire and from fortified houses the irregulars also were forced to retreat.

Eamon de Valera has been seen among his followers in the Suir valley. Many of them are said to be mere schoolboys.

WOMEN IN A TIFF OVER LIGHT WINE AND BEER IDEAS

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Public sentiment is turning rapidly in favor of light wines and beer, in the opinion of Miss Alice Carpenter, director of the women's committee of the Association Against Prohibition. She issued a statement today in answer to criticism by Miss Mary Garret Hay of the League of Women Voters.

Miss Hay protested against activities of women who favor modifying the prohibition laws, and said that, with most of the members of the women's committee in Europe, she wondered who was doing its work. Miss Carpenter said:

"I am happy to inform Miss Hay that the work of the women's committee is being carried on with the help of such able women as Mrs. Theodore T. Van Norden, Mrs. John H. Iselin, Mrs. George T. Maxwell, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. Charles E. Proctor, and other recognized leaders in women's activities."

KING OF ENGLAND PRAISES GERMAN SHIP MAJESTIC

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

LONDON, Aug. 5.—[By Tribune Wireless.]—King George and Queen Mary inspected the former German steamship Majestic at Cowes today. King George happened to pick out Mr. Cyrus McCormick's de luxe stateroom to visit, and then the engine rooms, where the oil burning turbines were examined.

King George narrowly escaped from falling when he slipped on the iron stairway descending to the engine room as he could not clutch the greasy railings. The chief engineer gave the king a handful of cotton waste so he could obtain grips on the railings. The king praised the excellence of German construction and fittings.

REBELS AMBUSH TRIBUNE WRITER ON IRISH ROAD

Robin Hoods Then Help Him Along.

BY PAUL WILLIAMS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

KILKENNY, Aug. 5.—"Waterfording" at the front is popular among members of the press this season in those districts where the roads are unobstructed. No correspondent has had a "flivver" shot from under him such as used to happen in the old fashioned fracas—according to expense accounts —but mine unintelligently ran into an ambush, while returning this afternoon from Carrick-on-Suir.

Near Moucain, the "hedge bands," as the Free Staters frequently refer to the irregulars, laboriously had lifted three heavy planks from the bridge and rolled large stones from the roads. Our "Henry" reared on its haunches as the brakes were clamped on and sent the mud flying.

Into an Ambush.

It was noticed that interest was taken in the exhibition by a hatless rustic with an bandolier over one shoulder, his rifle at "ready," and an inexperienced finger cuddling the trigger. The chauffeur looked at the bridge, I looked at the chauffeur, and the irregular looked at both of us.

To help him another irregular soon came from behind an overturned farmer's cart. The hedges parted on the opposite side of the road, and a third appeared. It looked like a rehearsal of Robin Hood, except that the green uniform is now affected by the nationals. A few other irregulars entered unnoticed, and there was a feeling that more were nearby.

To one who advanced I expressed a desire to proceed as I knew all other routes were hopelessly blocked and only thirty minutes remained to catch a train for Dublin. This interlocutor took a hitch in his belt and said he would see about it. A council of war ensued in the adjacent woods at which none forwarded a reason for detaining us.

Planks Go Back.

The planks went back in the bridge flooring, the rocks were rolled aside, and tugging at the steering wheel the "war horse" bounded forward only to stop again at the request of a sentry, but an American passport convinced him I didn't belong to the Dublin brigade and we resumed before some Dubliners did come along with rifles in their hands.

Detours made the journey from Carrick-on-Suir twice as long as by the main road on account of broken bridges and felled trees, some of which had survived a hundred years of troubles, and necessitated travel along crooked byways where goats flattened themselves against the walls, chickens scurried and stubborn donkeys resented invasion.

On this lone route I counted twenty-three felled trees. Countrymen were still disposing of the remains of four stone barricades, and we passed the wreckage of two railway bridges. Near one of these a crew of linemen had been putting up poles at the roadside, and a few feet away two young men with rifles would not let them continue.

Snipers Driven Out.

Carick-on-Suir is quiet. There is no sniping in the town, and those who were operating yesterday in hills on the south side of the River Suir have been hunted out. Engineers are repairing the water main which was broken when the bridge was dynamited. The city has been without water since Wednesday night, and there is not even any whisky to mix with that pumped from almost forgotten wells. This hardship will be remedied with the arrival this afternoon of a cargo boat from Waterford.

Clonmel is the next stop of the successful column under John T. Prout, "the Yank," whose exploits have won him promotion to commander general, corresponding to our brigadier general.

FAITHFUL GUARD OF SANTA MARIA DIES AT HIS POST

Fifteen years ago Samuel Peterson, veteran lifeguard, was made harbor master at Jackson park and was given the care of the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria, replicas of the three caravels of Columbus. With the care of a father he guarded them from mutilation by sightseers bent on carrying away bits of the ships as souvenirs.

Then the Nina and the Pinta were destroyed a short while ago. Peterson had left only the Santa Maria, in which he made his home.

Yesterday Peterson's body was found in is floating residence. Heart disease is believed to have caused his death. He was 57 years old.

"ON THE BLOCK!"

All Mary's Lygo's dreams of a cozy little home with Gordon C. Thorne, will be rudely shattered by the auctioneer's hammer at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon when William Levy of the Michael Tauber company opens a public sale of her effects at the apartment she maintained for almost a year at 2754 Hampden court.

Miss Lygo twice attempted suicide in her love for the young millionaire; and is now suing him for a large sum for breach of promise.

A bit of quaint evidence of the girl's affection for Thorne was discovered by the auctioneers while they were tabulating the furniture, books, lamps, draperies, etc., preparatory to letting them go to the highest bidder. This was a blotter pad in her bedroom with its twin beds—the gift of Mrs. William C. Camp Thorne, Thorne's mother—on which was written many times, the words: "I love G. C. T."

The auctioneers estimate that the things which were to have spelled "home" to Mary Lygo will bring between $6,000 and $7,000.

GORKY THANKS AMERICANS FOR AID TO RUSSIA

[Copyright: 1922: By the New York Times.]

LONDON, Aug. 5.—"In the history of practical humanitarianism I know of no accomplishment which in terms of magnitude or generosity could be compared to the relief you have actually accomplished," says Maxim Gorky in a letter received today by the chairman of the London branch of the American relief administration. He lays special stress on the work done for Russia's scientists and men of letters and continues:

"Your help will be inscribed in history as a unique and gigantic accomplishment worthy of the greatest glory and will long remain in the memory of millions of Russian children saved from death by you."

On behalf of these children and their parents Gorky thanks not only the A. R. A. but the American people. "I believe," he adds, "that the recollection of American self-sacrifice in saving these children will make them better and more generous men and women."

Secretary Denby Leaves Philippines for America

MANILA, P. I., Aug. 5.—[United Press.]—Secretary of the Navy Denby, who has been touring Japan, China and the Philippines, was to leave for the United States late today. While here he inspected the naval station at Olongapo.

PRINCELY PREY OF PLEBEIAN POLICE JUST A U. S. DUDE

Disguised as Bourbon, N. Y. Falls for Him.

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—His royal highness Prince Louis Henri de Chateroux de Bussigny de Bourbon, heir apparent to the throne of France, personal adviser of the late czar of all the Russias, and commandant of his bodyguard, a general in the Russian army in the world war, intimate of Theodore Roosevelt and of the late Pope Benedict, all by his own admission—is, it was learned today, none other than—

Harold Schwarm, 23, until a few years ago the town dude of New Britain, Conn.

Following the identification today of the "prince" as the former village character, who married Ethel Abetz there in 1916 and was divorced by her on July 27, 1920, in Hartford, New Britain folks are laughing at New York.

"Prince's" Fatigue Uniform.

Attired in white Russian tunic, with black citation cords and a mourning band "for the late czar," corduroy breeches, chauffeur's puttees, a cap with two gold stars and two silver bars —the "fatigue uniform of a retired Russian major general"—the prince for a year or more has been a familiar figure on Riverside drive.

He almost invariably toted a four foot gold plated sword and was accompanied by his monkey, "Cheeto," and his dog, an Italian wolf hound, "a present from the late pope." His secretary and valet is Joseph Terry, former United States navy sailor.

Last Sunday the "prince" was arrested when, it was charged, he interfered by brandishing his sword while detectives were raiding an alleged disorderly apartment in the same West 96th street building in which he has his abode.

Judge Blushes for Gotham.

Magistrate Simpson, when the "prince' was arraigned after two days and nights in a cell in his full military regalia, declared his arrest was "outrageous," rebuked the arresting officers, and apologized in the name of the city of New York.

Confronted tonight by statements of his mother, a sister, and other Connecticut relatives, the "prince" laughed contemptuously.

"Ridiculous, absurd," he said. "Bring on these doubting peasants and let them face me."

FRANCE BEGINS LONE FIGHT TO MAKE BERLIN PAY

Takes Lien Upon German Property in Alsace.

BY FLOYD GIBBONS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Aug. 5.—The French economic sanctions against Germany because of the latter's refusal to continue monthly payments of $10,000,000 in settlement of pre-war commercial claims of allied nationals against German nationals, became effective at noon today.

The sanctions establish a tentative claim against the property of Germans living in Alsace-Lorraine, and also halt the complicated mechanism of reimbursement of German citizens by the German government for their property and commercial credits liquidated in allied countries during the war. France is able to prevent this reimbursement through stoppage of any further acknowledgment of these goods. Germany has been paying claims to its own citizens at a faster rate than the claims of allied nationals against Germans.

French Feel Justified.

In themselves the sanctions are not of first rate importance, as compared to the basic vaster problem of reparations, but the real significance of the enforcement lies in the fact that the French government was finally pushed to the point where it decided to act independently of the other allies.

It is this threat of separate action against Germany and secondarily the extension of today's sanctions that M. Poincare will hold over Mr. Lloyd George at London on Monday. In the eyes of the French, this is justified by the British refusal to participate in the allied pressure to make Germany pay which France considers absolutely essential.

Admits Germany Bankrupt.

In the supreme council France will only agree to allow Germany short cash moratorium in the event Germany will furnish productive guarantees. Otherwise, France will act alone. M. Poincare is driven to drastic action by the state of French finances, and also his own position.

The French government frankly admits that Germany is bankrupt financially, but contends that Germany is rich economically. France insists that Germany will allow itself to remain financially bankrupt for many years in the hope of escaping reparations, or at least the hope of a new reparations settlement at the time Germany is at the lowest ebb. France wishes strict allied financial control of Germany.

Paper Opposes Action.

The question of French sanctions must inevitably come up in London because Belgium fears a stoppage of the reparations payments and consequently Belgian priority, if Germany uses all its available cash to pay private claims. In taking sanctions the French government announced it was merely the first step and it would apply more drastic ones until Germany promised to make the payments which are due the 15th of every month. However, the council is meeting to intervene before the other sanctions are taken.

M. Poincare is not supported unanimously by the French press. La Journee Industrielle, a leading conservative industrial newspaper, pointing out that France sold 800,000,000 francs (about $80,000,000) worth of merchandise to Germany in the first six months of the year and political quarrels tend to injure this trade.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Rumors of French action against Germany following expiration of M. Poincare's ultimatum at noon today crashed the stock market after the closing of the exchange, quotations on marks soaring to 4,500 to £, which was offered in some cases this afternoon.

Downing street anxiously awaited official advices regarding France's action via the Paris embassy.

Everything is ready for M. Poincare's arrival tomorrow night. Mr. Lloyd George, who proceeded to Chequers, his official country home, this morning is returning to London tomorrow afternoon to meet the French premier at the Victorian station. Foreign Minister Schanzer from Rome, and Minister of Finance Theunis from Brussels are coming at the same time.

Expect Cabinet Changes.

The results of the coming reparations conference is expected to have a vital bearing upon Mr. Lloyd George's cabinet.

The Coalition party has long been giving evidence of disintegrating and last week's split over the Balfour note and the persistent suggesting that the United States cancel its debts has caused a deepening since then as the bad effect of the note upon America and France is realized.

It is reported that the prime minister is preparing to shake up the cabinet and introduce new blood following the conference. Lord Balfour, who definitely asserted he would not accept the foreign ministership permanently, is more anxious than ever to quit following the outcry against his note.

Shortt May Go.

Because of this Lord Curzon is returning to London tomorrow to attempt to resume the office. Intimate friends of Lord Curzon assert he is physically unfit for work and that a speedy collapse is certain if he persists.

Mr. Lloyd George is understood to be preparing a change in the home office also, kicking Home Secretary Edward Shortt upstairs to a judgeship on the king's bench, following an outcry over the reprieving of Ronald True after the hanging of Jacoby. It is stated he will substitute Sir Hamar Greenwood, formerly head of the Irish office which is now closed up.

WHAT TO DO?

Music—his own or anybody else's—had no charms to quell the terrible uncertainty of George A. Robertson, one of the muse's devotees, who plays with the Symphony orchestra.

The musician was found moaning in Grant park by a sympathetic policeman, who took him to the South Clark street station and listened to his tale.

What's bothering George is: Did the mother of Dorothy Bell, pretty music student from Muncie, Ind., smile upon his suit, or did she tell him to keep away?

"The uncertainty will kill me," insisted Robertson.

"No, it won't," said the desk sergeant. "Toddle on home and think it over while you're asleep."

SUFFOCATED BY SMOKE, FIREMAN DIES SOON AFTER

Steward Lynn, 3301 South Ashland avenue, a fireman in Truck company No. 8, died early this morning after being overcome by smoke when fighting a fire at the Louis Gertenrisch candy factory, 3042-44 Archer avenue.

Lynn was taken from the second story of the building by other members of the company and was hurried to the County hospital. He died there shortly afterward.

$250,000 in Yakima Valley Lambs Coming to Chicago

Yakima, Wash., Aug. 5.—One hundred carloads of Yakima valley lambs, representing nearly $250,000 on the cars, will be shipped to the Chicago market within the next seven days, according to railroad officials. Nearly all important sheepmen of the valley will be represented in the shipments.

Train Carrying Troops Derailed in Oklahoma

Tulsa, Okla., Aug. 5.—Two cars and the trucks of the engine of a St. Louis-San Francisco troop train carrying soldiers of the Kansas national guard were derailed at Dawson, five miles east of here, early today. No one was injured.

GHOSTLY PIRATES RAID WET SHIPS AND KID DRY NAVY

Law and Lawless Look Alike to Buccaneers.

New York, Aug. 5.—The presence in outer New York harbor of a phantom rum pirate, which pounces on liquor smugglers by night and joshes the prohibition navy by day, was revealed to customs officials when the United States rum scout Taylor returned to port today after trying for a week to capture this modern Capt. Kidd.

Numerous tales of the escapades of the mystery ship, which has thrown consternation into the fleet of nondescript craft engaged in coastwise liquor smuggling, were brought in by the Taylor's crew.

The name of the craft is unknown, for none of its victims or pursuers has seen a single mark of identification on its mist gray hull. The vessel's lines were described as those of a high speed cruiser, over 80 feet in length and propelled by two noiseless gasoline motors.

An Old Time Buccaneer.

The pirate captain is said to be a dare devil disciple of the Capt. Kidd he emulates. His crew of eight are an armed gang of reckless outlaws who carry automatic pistols instead of cutlasses.

Their craft hovers just outside the twelve mile limit, at the end of the ocean lane traveled by tugs, schooners, trawlers, and yachts, engaged in hauling liquor from Nassau, Bahamas, and St. John, N. S., to New York and New Jersey customers.

An instance of the pirates' method was recited by a member of the Taylor's crew as follows:

A smuggler's craft was anchored outside the safety of the twelve mile limit, waiting for the speedy harbor launch which would transfer its cargo of imported liquor to bootleggers ashore.

Roll of Dough Is His Bait.

Suddenly the pirate ship appeared out of the evening mist and drew alongside. Its skipper boarded and anchored vessel, flashed a huge roll of currency and bargained for the purchase of 200 cases of whisky.

When the liquor had been transferred from the hold of one vessel to the other the pirate calmly stuffed his roll out of sight and leaped aboard his own craft. The victimized crew ran for their guns. When they returned they found themselves looking into the muzzles of eight automatic pistols, as the mystery ship suddenly dove into the darkness. This quick disappearance act has earned the pirate ship the name of "Pelican."

Capt. D. S. McDonald of the Taylor reported having seen the "Pelican" several times during the week he was on its trail, but never once did it venture inside the twelve mile limit without whisking away to safety when the Taylor hove in sight.

Spoofing the Snoopers.

Sometimes, said McDonald, the Volstead Capt. Kidd would shout an invitation to the crew of the rum chaser to have a drink. At other times the crew would line the rail—at a safe distance—drinking from a newly opened bottle of liquor.

Carrying liquor with an estimated value of $1,000,000, the Onward, a 225 foot yacht, and one of the finest of its class in the world, was anchored about fourteen miles off Fire island, it was reported to prohibition headquarters.

With the Onward are two schooners, each also loaded to the gunwales with liquor. The vessels are under British registry. The officers say the cargo "is destined for St. Pierre de Miquelon, Nova Scotia," and refuse other information to prohibition officials they permit to board the ship.

ALERT FASCISTI STAMP OUT REDS AND RULE ITALY

Hardened on the Piave, They Defy Weak Rome.

[Copyright: 1922: By the New York Times.]

ROME, Aug. 5.—The prestige and power of the Fascisti have been daily increasing and they may now be called the rulers of Italy, according to the opinion expressed in political circles.

This state of affairs, though highly unconstitutional, is considered by a large majority of Italians preferable to being ruled by nobody, which has been more or less the case with the last few cabinets that Italy has had, or being ruled by subversives. The fault with the last few governments has not been due to the men who composed them so much as to force of circumstances.

Sail Trimming Premiers.

The governments have all been weak because instead of having a definite policy to pursue in the teeth of any opposition, such as the Fascisti have given, they have been far too preoccupied about their parliamentary situations, far too afraid of losing power or of offending some group in the chamber which might precipitate matters. They feared both to oppose or favor the Fascisti.

The vacillating policy of the government caused apprehension by the people. There was danger that subversives, taking advantage of the situation, might get the upper hand, attempting what for years has been their dream, getting hold of all the power of the state and becoming absolute masters of the country.

Fascisti Used to War.

The Fascisti have been far too energetic for them, or the government, which was accustomed to dealing with crowds which at the sight of rifles, or at most of armored cars, fled like rabbits. When instead thousands of men, all ex-soldiers, accustomed to war, presented a soldierlike front and replied with military tactics to the soldiery sent to disband them, the ministry felt helpless.

The consequence was that the Fascisti thought that their moment had come to put down the subversives throughout Italy and to make the country feel that they had the force, efficiency, and ability to prevent bolshevism being transplanted from Russia here, as the Communists and Socialists intended to do.

Order in Some Cities.

ROME, Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—The storm violence between Italy's two extreme political elements—Fascisti and Communists—which has swept the country throughout the week, began to show some signs of abatement tonight, leaving in its wake scores killed and thousands wounded.

Reports from various parts of the country, however, indicated that both factions were maintaining a defiant attitude, and it is impossible to predict whether this is only a temporary lull or whether the fighting will be resumed. The abyss separating the extreme parties has been widened because of the short lived general strike proclaimed throughout the country in protest against Fascisti reprisals.

Eight Dead in Leghorn.

The government announced shortly after noon today that order has been restored in Milan, Genoa and Ancona, after desperate fighting had raged in all three places for more than twenty-four hours. But reports from other parts of the country showed that hostilities were far from over.

A Leghorn dispatch announces the restoration of order there, but with a death roll of eight and several hundred wounded.

Nothing definite is known as to the number of casualties at Milan, but more than 500 arrests were made there. Fifty of these were Socialists apprehended in their clubhouse, where arms and ammunition also were seized. The city, it was stated, was still intensely excited.

Killed by Own Bomb.

At Pontelongo, near Padua, a Fascisti band attacked the house of a Socialist, Antonio Ferin, killing a son and a daughter of the family and wounding another son.

A Communist, who was fighting from a tree at Sampierdarena, was wounded in the leg and fell to the ground and a bomb which he had in his pocket exploded, blowing him to bits.

Appeals for Peace.

The general situation was the subject of discussion at two long sessions of Premier Facta's new cabinet today, at which it was decided to address an appeal to the country urging the cessation of factional strife. The appeal, written by the premier himself, called attention to injuries coming to Italy through frequent disorders, and said the harm thus created was not limited to the interior, but that its effect would be felt abroad, where Italian credit and prestige would be lowered.

Another appeal, in the form of a pastoral letter, was issued by Mgr. Tosi, newly appointed archbishop of Milan, which he addressed to the "people and clergy of the diocese." Mgr. Tosi warmly appealed for peace and concord, irrespective of religion, "for the good of the city, the country and society."

"FLOAT" TO WORK AT MILE A MINUTE

RINGLING SPEEDS 3 GIRLS TO WORK 47 MIN. TOO SOON

Power Boat Trims Car Time to Nothing.

BY GENEVIEVE FORBES.

One way streets, traffic jams, jiggly busses, joggly trucks and no street cars at all have done their best to make punctuality one of the lost arts, but three north shore girls arrived at work yesterday forty-seven minutes ahead of time.

Robert Ringling, son of Charles Ringling, millionaire circus owner, was to blame. For, as a voluntary chauffeur, he took the girls down in his speed boat, the Viroling and made a mile a minute as long as the miles lasted.

"Strikes don't get a rise out of the water," declared Mr. Ringling yesterday, as he patted the bow of his speed boat more lovingly than the beautiful lady in pink tights ever patted the neck of one of his dad's circus horses.

Travel at Its Best.

"This beats all kinds of travel. No cinders in your eyes, plenty of fresh air and light, no strap hangers standing on your feet, and a 'dewy' complexion when you arrive at the office."

The passengers agreed, but registered one complaint—lack of transfers. "It's all very well," they insisted, "if you want to go from Evanston to the Municipal pier, but it's a different story if you have to keep a dentist appointment on Kedzie avenue and Madison, or take dictation from a lawyer on Milwaukee avenue."

But their complaints never reached the front seat. You ask Mr. Ringling a question in Wilmette; the boat is doing an academic turn in front of Northwestern university campus in Evanston before he answers, and is crossing the border into Chicago by the time you have replied. Geography flies as fast as time in this trip.

Dangers in the Game.

"Flirting with a speed boat," the son of the circus man explains as the craft rounds the point at Calvary, "is dangerous," and he recalls the explosions, the fires, the smash-ups in which he has been, and in which members of his family have been injured and one killed.

Young Ringling is always ready to take a chance on the water, but from childhood he's been a bit leary of the animals in his father's circus. He was the only youngster in his neighborhood who couldn't stand on his head; pink lemonade always made him ill, and he wouldn't walk the back fence, much less a tight rope.

"But now," he said yesterday, "I have something that makes even the circus stars catch their breath and ask for a life preserver," and the speedometer shot up ten points as the passengers swallowed their tonsils and looked imploringly at the clock in the Wrigley tower.

Opera Stars Get Thrills.

Circus stars are not the only guests whom he terrifies in this pleasant way. Opera stars are also on his list. When he isn't running a speed boat Mr. Ringling is running the scale as a baritone in concert work. And when he isn't busy at that he invites a few of the opera singers out to make a few records in the Viroling.

"It's more exciting than an Arabian horse in the circus," he shouted, "and more unexpected than an opera singer's first night; more dependable than a car barn full of cars or a garage full of motors," and he helped his passengers out forty-seven minutes before the boss was due to arrive.

Keep Cool Here

The North American Restaurant is ventilated, as well as cooled, by one of the finest and most complete ventilating plants ever installed. The air you breathe here is fresh, "outdoor" air, washed and cooled to a comfortable degree. No matter what the weather you dine in comfort here.

We are very proud of the fact that an unusually large number of Children are brought here to dine by their parents. Approximately, an average of 3000 Children eat here every week. That is more than 400 a day—exceeding 150,000 a year. That fact alone proclaims this a good place in which to dine.

Mothers and fathers are very particular about the food their Children eat. They know that the food at the North American is always good and pure and wholesome and so they never hesitate to bring the Children with them.

And Chicago mothers and fathers know well that this is the one place where Children are really welcome. We are always glad to see them and have provided plenty of special high-chairs to make them comfortable. And here they get the richest and purest Certified Milk which comes into Chicago. Furthermore: Because of our extremely big food portions (with no extra charge when they are shared by two or more people) the food the youngsters eat adds very little, if anything, to the cost of the parents' meal.

And the Children themselves like the North American. If you want to know how well they like it ask your own little son or daughter. If they have never been here bring them in to dine and then ask them. You will find that not only do they like it, but they will ask to come again and again—this latter being the real tribute to our claim.

People are Pretty Wise in this 20th Century

SIXTY YEARS ago, Abraham Lincoln said that you couldn't "fool all of the people all of the time." But today you can't fool many of the people any of the time.

It's getting to be a pretty wise old world. The man who still believes "that there's one born every minute" is the one.

People and products have got to make a name for themselves.

No product is ever any better than the man who produces it.

Take for example, malt extract, for which there is so large a demand. We have been in the malt extract business for fifty years. We don't know it all yet. But we do know one thing. That to cheapen a malt extract in any way is to destroy its value.

Ninety per cent of the malt extracts made today are filled with moisture and adulterated with cheap corn. They are not worth taking home because they can not give results.

Our "Puritan" Malt Extract is made only from the choicest barley produced in America. It is malted by our own secret processes which we have learned through fifty years of experience.

In spite of the enormous demand and the cheapening of prices, we have never lowered our standard nor cheapened our quality.

The result is that there is probably more Puritan Malt Extract sold today than all the other malt extracts combined. People recognize quality and value. And in this day, Mr. Lincoln, you can't fool many of the people any of the time.

There are now several million people in America who ask for and demand

SHOOTING IT OUT AFTER WOUNDED WINS COP $100

Policeman McCarthy Gets Tribune Hero Award.

With a bullet which had penetrated his shoulder and ripped along his clavicle, lodged four inches deep in his throat, Patrolman James W. McCarthy "shot it out" with a robber who had just attempted to kill a policeman. That occurred July 14.

Today THE TRIBUNE awards McCarthy, a member of Lieut. William O'Connor's squad at the detective bureau, $100 for his heroism, regarded as the most outstanding act of bravery among policemen, firemen and live savers in July. The award is the thirty-first since this newspaper began making such awards in January of 1920.

Chase Bandit Car.

Lieut. O'Connor, with McCarthy and Patrolmen Arthur Murphy and Frank Green, were driving west on 35th street when they noticed three men in a Buick car going east on the same street near Mospratt avenue. There was no license plate on the front of the Buick, but after it had passed Lieut. O'Connor recognized the number on the rear license plate, M-436936, as the number reported on a car used in a half dozen stickups.

The policemen turned their car around and gave chase. When the driver of the bandit car noticed that he was being followed he opened the throttle and attempted to escape. Failing in that, he turned into an alley and the two men with him opened fire on the police car. Lieut. O'Connor returned the fire with a shotgun.

Two Men Run.

Leaping from the bandit car, James Smith, 4610 Calumet avenue, its driver, allowed it to run through a fence and ran into the weeds. The second man also ran, but was captured by Murphy and Green. He gave the name of Frank Siegman and was later identified as a robber.

The other bandit, who later gave the name of Gene Kunz, had been wounded, though this was not known to McCarthy. Kunz lay in the car and McCarthy approached him, demanding his gun and calling on him to surrender. Instead of obeying, Kunz fired five shots, one of which hit McCarthy and whirled him half way around.

Returns the Fire.

McCarthy, bleeding profusely from the bullet, which, owing to its peculiar course, had made five holes in his shoulder, upper chest and neck and later caused physicians, after a hasty examintion, to conclude that he had been wounded five times and was dying, replied by emptying his gun at the holdup man. Two of McCarthy's bullets took effect and it is not known definitely whether Kunz died from the wounds inflicted by Lieut. O'Connor's shot gun slugs or by the bullets from McCarthy's pistol.

"Kunz died almost immediately," reads Chief of Detective Hughes' report to Chief of Police Fitzmorris recommending McCarthy for THE TRIBUNE hero award. "He was later identified as one of the men who took part in the holdup of a Fair store driver July 11, in which $1,700 was taken.

"I consider McCarthy's work an exceptional act of bravery."

Those given honorable mention for brave deeds performed in July are the following:

Sergt. Bart Cronin, Burnside station—For the rescue of a 5 year old boy who was about to be crushed beneath the wheels of a five ton truck. Cronin was grazed by the truck as he leaped out of its way with the boy.

Rescues Aged Man.

Patrolman Byron G. Sovea, Stanton avenue station—For his rescue of an aged man from the third floor of the Olympia hotel, 3734 Cottage Grove avenue. The building was on fire and Sovea ran through smoke filled corridors and up a burning stairway to reach the old man's room.

Fireman George Durkin, engine company No. 78—For remaining on duty at a fire July 18, though he had been kicked by a horse and ordered taken to a hospital by his superior officer.

The brave act of Sovea was performed June 30, but a report of it was received too late for its consideration with the June acts of heroism.

NEVER FLINCHED

Patrolman James McCarthy.

Policeman given Tribune's monthly $100 hero award for shooting it out with a robber after having himself been wounded.

DEMOCRATS NOT TO FIGHT REED IN NOVEMBER VOTE

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—Following a conference of anti-Reed Democrats this afternoon, it was said that no action would be taken to pursue the reported movement to put an "independent Democrat" in the field in an effort to defeat United States Senator James A. Reed for reëlection at the November election.

First information that such a movement was afoot was made public by the St. Louis Post-Dispatch today, which stated Democrats hostile to Reed had held half a dozen conferences since Reed's nomination over Breckinridge Long was assured.

Mr. Long denied to the Associated Press that he had taken or would take any part in such a move. At the same time he refused to make any comment on the outcome of Tuesday's primary, saying he was "sitting tight." Virtually complete returns show Reed's lead to be approximately 6,000 votes.

Chalmers and Jewett Cut Motor Prices Radically

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Reductions of $210 on the five passenger touring car; $150 on the seven passenger touring car; $160 on the roadster, and $400 on the coupe were announced today by the Chalmers Motor Car company. The revision of list is the twelfth in the industry during the last week and is marked as one of the most radical in the extent of its reductions.

The Paige-Detroit company also announced reductions in four models of the Jewett line to prices as follows:

Jewett five passenger touring, $995; three passenger roadster, $995; five passenger sedan, $1,465; four passenger coupe, $1,445. All prices are f. o. b. factory.

Barbara Blatchford and Alice Bemis Brides.

Two attractive weddings yesterday brought many society folk in from their country places over the weekend.

In Oak Park Miss Barbara Blatchford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Blatchford of 333 North Euclid avenue, became the bride of Dr. Earle B. Fowler, son of Ernest S. Fowler, also of Oak Park.

The ceremony was read at 4 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, with only members of the two families and a few intimate friends in attendance, and was followed by a reception.

Recent Bride Is Bridesmaid.

Mrs. John Blatchford, sister-in-law of the bride, and herself a bride of last May, and Miss Irma Fowler, sister of the bridegroom, served as bridesmaids. The best man was the bridegroom's father, Ernest S. Fowler.

The bride wore the gown worn by her mother at her own wedding, an ivory satin, trimmed with old point lace, and fashioned to suit the mode of today. The orange blossoms that bound the long tulle veil were of satin and chiffon, a headdress that has graced many weddings in the Blatchford family.

The bride was graduated from Vassar college in 1916.

The Edgewater Presbyterian church was the setting for the wedding of Miss Alice Louise Bemis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Webster Bemis, and Dr. Francis Todd H'Doubler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. H'Doubler of Racine, Wis. The ceremony was performed at 8 o'clock by Dr. Asa Ferry and was followed by a reception at the Bemis residence, 5647 Kenmore avenue.

Gowned in Ivory Satin.

The bride was gowned in ivory satin, fashioned with a three yard train, and trimmed with bands of pearls. The bridal bouquet was of white roses and lillies of the valley.

The bride's attendants were the Misses Louise Jagsch, Estelle Jagsch, Esther Belle Sargent, and Bertha Ochsner. The maid of honor was Miss Margaret Newell H'Doubler, a sister of the bridegroom.

The two little flower girls, Mary and Jean May, wore pink frocks and carried baskets of pink blossoms. Lloyd Edward Bemis, brother of the bride, was best man and the ushers were Dr. Alton Ochsner, Dr. Royal Rudolph, and Dr. A. Freidenfeld.

Mr. and Mrs. H'Doubler left immediately for the northern woods of Wisconsin, where they will spend their honeymoon camping.

Gen. Chen Reports Defeat for Sun Yat Sen's Troops

CANTON, Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—Headquarters of Gen. Chen Shiung Ming, the leader favoring the unification plan of the Peking government, announced today that his troops had occupied Chihing, nearly 200 miles north of Canton, and were driving back northeasterly toward Namyung the expedition of Sun Yat Sen, deposed president of the Canton republic.

SOCIETY BRIDES

U. S. 3 PER CENT LAW STRONG BAR TO IMMIGRATION

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—A survey of the immigration figures for the fiscal year just completed indicates that the 3 per cent limitations law has proved an effectual bar to any overwhelming movement of immigrants from southern and eastern European countries to the United States, Secretary of Labor Davis announced today. The figures show strikingly that northern and western Europe, source of the so-called Nordic immigration, is falling far short of filling its quotas, while the southern and eastern races are sending just as many to America as America will accept.

A summary of the immigrants admitted during the fiscal year, which ended June 30, shows that the following countries sent to the United States 100 per cent of the quotas allowed them under the 3 per cent law; Belgium, Greece. Hungary, Italy, Luxemburg, Poland, Roumania, Jugo-Slavia, Palestine, Turkey, Syria, the miscellaneous European and Asiatic countries, Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. The countries which filled their quotas to 97 per cent were Albania, Bulgaria, Czecho-Slovakia, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland and Armenia.

In contrast with these nations, the countries of northern and western Europe in some instances sent less than one-half of the number permitted under the quota law. Germany sent 28 per cent of its allotment, Sweden 43 per cent, Norway 48 per cent, The Netherlands 66 per cent, and France 75 per cent.

FOES OF REDS ON TRIAL FOR LIVES STAND BY IDEAL

MOSCOW, Aug. 5. — Refusing to capitulate in any way on their opposition to sovietism, thirty-four social revolutionists who are on trial for alleged treason practically spurned an attitude of clemency manifested by M. Piatikoff, chairman of the revolutionary tribunal.

Their determination not to recant was virtually a decision to seal their own sentences, for when the chairman asked them if they would discontinue their fight on the soviet regimé if liberated most of them would not even deign to answer, and the rest asserted they would stand by their principles and would fight the communistic dictatorship to the end.

A recommendation for acquittal of M. Semenoff and Lydia Konoplova and others who turned witnesses for the prosecution in the terrorist plots was made by Nicolai Bucharin.

BRIDE OF THREE MONTHS DROWNS.

Paris, Ill., Aug. 5.—Mrs. Walter S. Sanders, a bride of three months, was drowned in Mill creek, near Marshall, yesterday, while swimming with a party of friends. She went into deep water and when missed several minutes later had disappeared. The body was recovered.

THIEF HELD HERE AS GIRL WAITS ON HER WEDDING DAY

Fiance Arrested on Eve of Marriage.

If a story told police by Louis Bernstein, 1523 South Homan avenue, a confessed robber, is true, somewhere in Pittsburgh a girl waited in vain yesterday for the coming of her fiancé. It was her wedding day.

Bernstein was arrested Friday by Policeman Michael Collins after a running race through the heart of the loop in which many shots were exchanged.

Hides Her Picture.

When his capture appeared imminent, Collins noticed Bernstein toss several articles into an open manhole in the street. At the Central station he confessed that the discarded articles were his gun, a photograph of the girl, his notebook, and a letter.

Bernstein admitted, police say, that he is responsible for seven recent robberies of various stores of the Newark Shoe company. He had just held up another.

Three other men, taken as accomplices, are Max Rosen, 3331 Federal street; George Teeling, and Charles Donohue.

Community Wedding Fund.

"I've been divvying up my share of the loot with Bernstein on account of the girl," Rosen is said to have related. "You see Louis has been stuck on the girl for a long time, but didn't seem to be able to get enough money to marry. We planned to get money together for the wedding and then we'd all go straight. Yesterday's job was to have been the last. The girl accordingly left Chicago Thursday. Bernstein was to have met her in Pittsburgh today for the wedding."

None of the men would reveal the identity of the prospective bride.

Priest's Housekeeper, 60, Dies on 51st Street

Mrs. Catherine Hascamp, 60 years old, 3615 South Hoyne avenue, dropped dead in front of 1502 West 51st street yesterday. Heart disease was thought to be the cause. She was housekeeper for the pastor of St. Maurita's Catholic church.

MADER FIGHTS TO KEEP JAIL RECORD AWAY FROM JURY

Judge Decides Monday if It's to Go In.

BY PHILIP KINSLEY.

Although outwardly confident of acquittal of the police murder charges against Fred Mader and Big Tim Murphy, attorneys for these two defendants in Judge Thomas Taylor Jr.'s court fought a hard battle yesterday to keep from the jury the facts of public record concerning other convictions against these men. The arguments were held in Judge Taylor's chambers after the cross-examination of Mader, who had been called as a witness by his attorney, Charles E. Erbstein, had been interrupted.

"Why make such a fuss? You are not afraid of conviction here, are you?" asked Prosecutor Elwood Godman.

"You have a weak case and are trying desperately to bolster it up by prejudicing the jury against these defendants," answered Mr. Erbstein.

Question of Infamy.

Assistant State's Attorney Frederick L. Fake, in examining Mr. Mader, had only begun to delve into his history, but Mr. Erbstein anticipated what was coming and stopped the questioning. He argued that the state had no right to show any previous conviction where such conviction was not for an "infamous crime," and that the crime for which Mr. Mader served a sentence in Joliet was not in this character. He was convicted for conspiracy to extort money in a labor case, Mr. Erbstein told the court.

Mr. Godman said that as Mader had appeared as a volunteer witness the state had a right to ask him where he had been during the different periods of his life. This was all that he anticipated Mr. Fake would ask. The court said that the law did not permit a thing to be brought out by indirection which it was forbidden to bring out directly. He gave no ruling finally on the motion. Mr. Erbstein at one point in the argument said:

"With all due respect to your honor I will walk out of this courtroom if this ruling is against me. Every law in Illinois suports my contention."

Will Rule Monday.

Judge Taylor did not answer the thrust. He said he would announce his ruling Monday morning and the court was adjourned. Murphy's conviction in the mail robbery case is also involved in this ruling. Attorney Frank Comerford said that his client, Daniel McCarthy, was not interested in the question, as he was arrested but once in his life and was released soon after.

With the testimony of Mader, Murphy and McCarthy the case will be closed. Arguments to the jury are expected to begin Tuesday or Wednesday. The court still has under advisement motions to rule out much of the evidence and may change the aspect of the case considerably after all the evidence is in.

Mader stepped to the witness box at 10 a. m. Neatly dressed, a sharp face, cold blue eyes, glasses, carefully parted and thinning hair. He is called "Frenchy" by some of his associates. His answers were precise, clearly modulated and given with a slight tension of nerves which soon wore off. He is the retiring president of the Chicago Building Trades' council. His examination by Mr. Erbstein follows:

Doesn't Know Slayer, He Says.

Q.—Do you know who killed Terrence Lyons? A.—I do not.

Q.—When did you first see the defendant, John Miller? A.—In Judge Miller's court during the bond hearing.

Q.—Was he in your office in the Building Trades' council on May 8 last? A.—I never saw him in my life until he came into court.

Q.—Where were you on May 8. A.—I was home.

Q.—What was the condition of your health? A.—It was very bad. I had headaches and trouble with my eyes.

Q.—Did you ever give Hanson (the state witness "Smash" Hanson), a revolver? A.—Never.

Q.—Did you ever ask Hanson to shoot Mike Doyle in the leg or get some one to do it? A.—Never.

Q.—Did you ever have any dynamite in your office. A.—Never.

Q.—Was there ever a package in your desk and you slid down the roll top to cover it? A.—No.

His Labor Relations.

Q.—On May 5 did you have a conversation with two men in your office, one of whom had blood on his necktie, and did this man tell you he had just knocked a man off the ladder? A.—No, sir.

Q.—When were you elected president of the Building Trades council? A.—On Feb. 17.

Q.—What is your local organization? A.—The Fixture Hangers' union. I am the business agent.

Q.—When did your organization accept the Landis scale? A.—Last November or December.

Q.—Did you ever converse with McCarthy, the defendant, concerning dynamite or slugging. A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you send the witness Hanson to see Mr. Schlake as he testified? A.—Never.

Q.—Were you present in Powers' restaurant when Tim Murphy said: "I told you we were thirty days too late in that matter"? A.—I never heard it.

Q.—Did you have the combination to the safe in your office? A.—I did.

Q.—Where was it? A.—John Sweeney had it in a book.

Q.—Did you own any of the revolvers brought into this court? A.—I did not.

Q.—Were you ever in Horan's saloon? A.—Yes, once, when I took some friends to a west side hospital.

Q.—Did you ever meet Miller in Horan's saloon? A.—Never.

Q.—Did you see two men called "Stanley" and "Charley" there? A.—Never.

Q.—Did you offer a reward for the murder of Policeman Lyons? A.—Yes, $1,000, the day after my arrest.

Q.—Are you still ready to pay? A.—Any time.

Q.—Did you ever have conversations with any person or persons concerning any bombing of any plant or business in Chicago? A.—Never.

Q.—Have you anything to do with the glaziers' union? A.—I do not.

Q.—Did you at any time or at any place aid, advise or encourage Miller, "Charley" and "Stanley" to go out in a delapidated Ford car on the night of May 9 to do any bombing or anything else? A.—No sir.

Q.—Did you know they were going out in an auto? A.—No, sir.

Mr. Fake cross examined.

Q.—Where were you born? A.—In Chicago, in 1883.

Q.—Where did you first work? A.—For Marshall Field & Co., as cash boy.

Q.—How old were you then? A.—About 14.

Q.—What did you do next? A.—I worked for a printing firm across the street from the Board of Trade.

Q.—How long? A.—One week.

Worked Three Years.

Q.—Where next? A.—E. C. Walker, a broker, asked me to go to work for him.

Q.—How long did you work for him? A.—About three years.

Q.—How old were you when you left there? A.—About 18.

Q.—Where next? A.—For a fixture hanging firm, for one year.

Q.—Where then? A.—I went to New York. I worked for a fixture firm there. Q.—How long? A.—Nine months.

At this point Mr. Erbstein interrupted the examination.

George Jones, business agent of the roofers' union, was called to testify that he seconded the nomination of Mader for president of the building trades council.

Q.—Did you see Hanson at that meeting? A.—I could not say.

Q.—Did he second the nomination? A.—I know I did.

James A. Murphy, 3110 West Harrison street, a plumbing contractor and candidate for state superintendent of public instruction, testified that he had called at the building trades headquarters on May 10 and was one of those taken in the police raid.

Flood Is Recalled.

Emmett Flood, American Federation of Labor organizer, was recalled to the stand.

Q.—Was information brought to you while you were in custody that your boy would be indicted for murder? A.—Yes, sir.

Question and answer were stricken out by motion of the prosecution.

Q.—When you were in the detective bureau did Harry Paygman say anything about Murphy?

A.—Yes, he said they had the goods on "Big Tim." He said they had kicked in Izzq Braverman's ribs and made him squawk.

YANK TO GUIDE GLIDER IN FRENCH CONTEST TODAY

CLERMONT-FERRAND, Aug. 5.—Contestants are indulging in practice "glides" for the events tomorrow to be held under the auspices of the First International Experimental Congress of Motorless Airplanes. The contests will close on Aug. 20, and 100,000 francs will be given in prizes.

Numerous types of gliders are to be seen, some with stationary wings, others with flapping sails, and a number propelled in the same maner as a bicycle. The contenders hope to smash the record of twenty-one minutes sustained flight held by Harth of Germany.

Edmund Allen will pilot a monoplane entered by the American Aeronautical Engineering society.

All Set for Balloon Race.

GENEVA, Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—The American balloonists here are confident that they will give a good account of themselves in tomorrow's race for the James Gordon Bennett cup, whether it is decided to be a distance or a time race.

SIGNAL MEN IN REUNION.

MAN TRAILED FOR MONTHS SLAIN BY 'BLACK HANDERS'

He's Shot Down as He Waits for Shave.

Two assassins, believed by police to have been trailing John Patti, 50 years old, for months, accomplished their purpose early yesterday. Patti was shot to death in front of a barber shop at 370 West Oak street. His murderers escaped.

Two months ago, after receiving a "Black Hand" letter demanding $3,000, Patti was fired on from ambush. One bullet took effect and he recoved in Henrotin Memorial hospital. Previously an attempt was made to blow up his home at 2219 Seminary avenue.

Wife Seeks Death.

Mrs. Jennie Patti, wife of the victim, attempted to commit suicide by leaping from a third story window of her home when told of the murder. Her son, Samuel, 21 years old, and the police with difficulty quieted her.

A few moments before the tragedy Patti had stepped into a little barber shop at 370 West Oak street. Charles La Paglia, the proprietor, was busy and asked Patti to wait.

Patti dragged a chair out on the sidewalk and settled himself to read a newspaper. The assassins, two short, stout, swarthy men about 30 years old, approached the doomed man and a rapid interchange of Italian began. Suddenly guns flashed in the hands of all three men. Eight shots were fired and Patti slumped to the sidewalk. The assassins ran up an alley and disappeared.

Five Bullets Hit Him.

At the undertaking parlors of Berry & Love, 1135 North Wells street, it was found five bullets had entered Patti's body, one through the right cheek, another the temple, and others had penetrated the stomach, chest, and left hand.

Police obtained a description of the murderers from Morgan Mason, 15 years old, 372 West Oak street, who was playing with other children across the street.

Besides his widow Patti is survived by three children. After the former shooting and the bombing he insisted upon offering no explanation for the attacks to police. Lately, police learned, he has scarcely dared to venture from his home without a bodyguard.

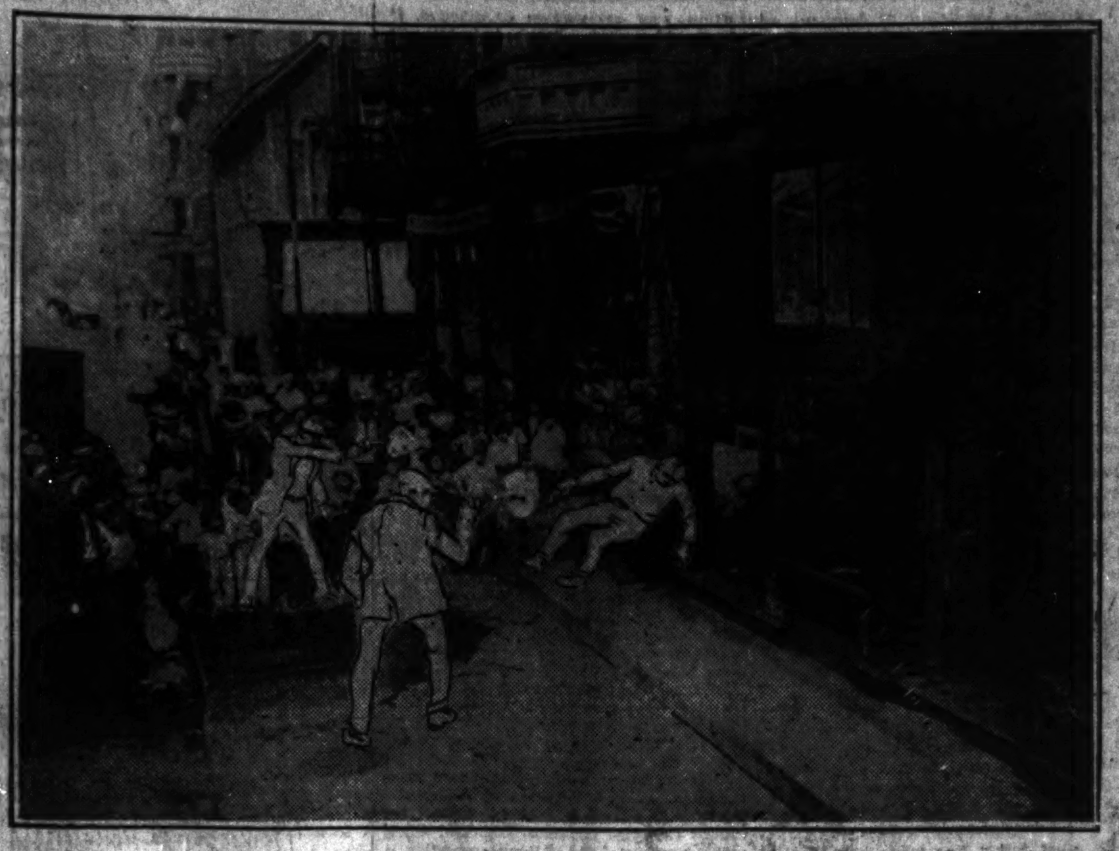
Patti, formerly a street sweeper, was reputed to have amassed considerable wealth recently and to have owned valuable North Side property. One police theory is that Patti, as chief of a powerful bootlegging clique, incurred the enmity of his associates.

Second Shooting.

Another shooting of similar character occurred in the same neighborhood last night. Frank Gambini, 1011 Cambridge avenue, walking home from a grocery store with his wife, Vita, was shot from behind by one of two men who followed them. Lieut. John Prendergast and a squad of police searched the neighborhood in vain for the assailants.

Gambini sustained two flesh wounds in his right arm.

HOW BLACKHANDERS SLAY



Graphic photo-diagram of how the Black Hand sent John Patti to his death yesterday. Patti, seated before a barber shop at 370 West Oak street, had no chance for his life. As he struggled to his feet, pulling his own gun, the two men shot him dead. A curious mob, as shown above, gathered quickly to watch the removal of Patti's body and stare at photographers and artists who made the above photo-diagram.

"JANE DOE" FINED FOR BAWLING UP TRAFFIC ON DRIVE

Miss Janet Dow of New York, who didn't misrepresent herself much in giving the name "Jane Doe" to the policeman who arrested her at Walton place and Lake Shore drive Friday night for "bawling up" traffic, was fined $1 and $1 costs by Judge J. G. Weaver in Speeders' court yesterday.

JANET DOW.

"I had a sick pup at the Drake hotel," explained the girl, who is studying music in Chicago, "and I was hurrying back to keep him company. I didn't mean to break any of your old rules."

Miss Dow was rescued from the woman's detention home Friday night by Charles W. Wrigley, 61 Bellevue place.

Her Beaming Beggar Boy Vamped by a Strange Doll

West Hoboken, N. J., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Julius Klumpp, Hudson county poormaster, found Mrs. Margaret Grantzow destitute and starving in her two rooms behind a store. She blamed her son, Andrew, for her predicament and asked the poormaster to have him arrested. Until last week she had taken great pride in Andrew. He is 28 and although he is blind, used to earn $75 every week, his mother said, being one of West Hoboken's most industrious beggars. Mrs. Grantzow suspects that he is still begging profitably but is spending his money on another woman.

"He was a good, dutiful son," she said, "until a woman came along and vamped him. She only wanted his money and she got it all."

100 Legion Members Sail to Visit Battlefields

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Leaving today on the President Roosevelt of the United States line are more than 100 members of the American Legion from all parts of the country who will revisit the battlegrounds over which many of them fought during the war.

CUBA PLANNING DECISIVE STEPS IN MONEY CRISIS

HAVANA, Cuba, Aug. 5.—Decisive steps will be taken during the coming week to apply remedies demanded by the Cuban government's financial situation, it was stated today by Carlos M. de Cespedes, secretary of state, who characterized the present state of affairs as "full of dangerous possibilities."

"Greater delay or a mistake in the means being sought," he declared, "may cause the immediate exercise of foreign rights, which, it is felt, we are not guaranteeing and the fulfillment of duties concerned with the economic stability of the government which for the good of the country we Cubans are in honor bound to carry out."

Mexican Officer Shot at Vera Cruz for Treason

Mexico City, Aug. 5.—Capt. Dominguez, who was court martialed for rebellion, was shot at Morelos barracks, Vera Cruz. Efforts to secure a pardon from President Obregon failed.

DOUBLE BILL FOR OPEN AIR CONCERT AT CUBS PARK

All tickets for last Wednesday evening's open air operatic concert at Cub's baseball park, which was postponed because of the strike, will be recognized as valid and will be honored next Wednesday evening, according to announcement by Leonard J. Grossman, president of Ramah lodge, No. 33, I. O. B. B., under auspices of which the open air concerts at Cubs' park are to be given.

A double bill has been scheduled for Wednesday, including Miss Irene Pavloska of Montreal, Que., and Forrest Lamont of New York, both of grand opera fame, and Eric De Lamarter's symphony orchestra.

Mrs. A. B. Seelenfreund has reported that the Institute for the Blind has been given tickets by her to attend the last concert and this has set in motion the purchasing of blocks of tickets by music lovers who will put them at the disposal of various institutions of the city for use of inmates.

Burton Hanson, general counsel for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, died yesterday morning at the Presbyterian hospital, where he had undergone an operation, July 24.

BURTON HANSON.

For nearly forty years he had been connected with the railway. He was 71 years old. Surviving are his widow, a son, Alex McClure Hanson, and a daughter, Mrs. Chester Tripp.

Funeral services will be held at St. Mark's church, Evanston, tomorrow afternoon, and burial will be at Eureka, Wis., Tuesday.

LONDON VIEW ON LEAGUE SOUGHT BY JAMES M. COX

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—William Clifford of Duluth, Minn., who is at the Waldorf Astoria hotel after a trip to London, said today that he saw James M. Cox at the Savoy hotel in that city.

"Almost the first thing that Mr. Cox did after getting his bearings in the hotel," said Mr. Clifford, "was to stop a group of men, total strangers to him, and, bowing politely, say: 'I am an American citizen who was defeated for President of the United States two years ago. Would you mind giving me your opinion on the league of nations, how successful it is today, and how much more successful it would have been if America entered it?'"

That's as far as Clifford's story goes.

Former Illinois Resident Made a U. S. Vice Consul

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Thomas Horn Jr. of St. Louis, Mo., a former resident of southern Illinois, has been appointed vice consul in the United States consular service, and is on duty at the state department for instruction while awaiting assignment to a post. Mr. Horn is the son of Thomas Horn, formerly of Illinois, and vice president of the Southern Gem Coal corporation, with offices in Chicago.

After only one and one-half years in our new Chicago Store we find it absolutely necessary to not only increase the size of the store, but to add new departments as well.

The carpenters and builders are now here tearing down partitions and enlarging the store and we have decided to cut down prices simply because our present stock of merchandise interferes with the work of the contractors and we cannot afford to move it from place to place.

The Price of Every Garment Is Reduced From 15% to 50% in This Sale

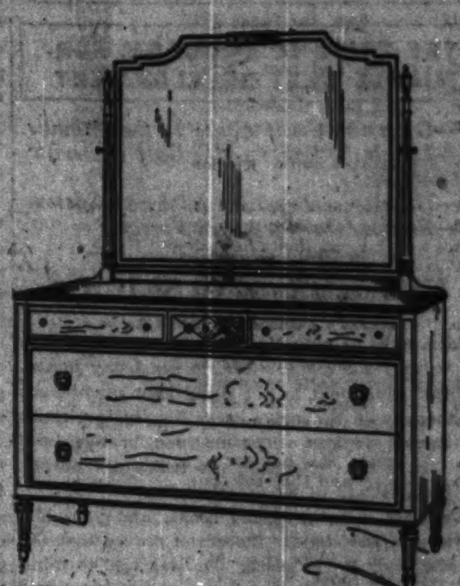
THERE'S a good deal of advantage here for those who have occasion to buy furniture; enough of an advantage to make it worth while to come in, even if it may not be very easy to get downtown at times.

The advantage isn't in the low prices alone; that's merely a money-advantage. The Scholle quality is important; and the assurance of satisfaction or your money back is important. These things—knowing that what you buy is good; and that you don't have to keep it if you think you'd rather not—are even more of an advantage than the money saving.

Furniture for living room, dining room, bedroom; furniture in full suites or in single pieces; costly or inexpensive furniture, Scholle quality, at very low prices; for your advantage.



Fine Rugs for You

You may want a very inexpensive rug for some needy spot; or a very rich oriental. We'll take an interest in whatever you want, and help you buy right. The prices are low.

USE THE BIG STICK, MR. PRESIDENT.

Mid-August is approaching and cold weather is not so very far away. Coal is not being mined. Railway equipment is not being kept up because the shops, with the strike prevailing, cannot make the needed repairs. The railroad brotherhoods which have been operating the trains are uneasy and there is talk of a general strike.

The drift is towards the rocks, and you, Mr. President, must stop it. Roosevelt proved that the big stick can do the work. He was told to mind his own business. He ended a coal strike and prevented a coal famine. In a just public cause the power of the White House cannot be resisted now.

The railroad executives have turned you down, Mr. Harding. You presented a form of settlement of the shop strike which you believed considered all interests, the largest of which are public, and the executives rejected it by a vote of 265 to 2. The two thought the letter of rejection was not emphatic enough. You cannot submit to that.

The president of the United States, intervening for the public, cannot take "no" as an answer in such a case. The railroad executives say "no" because they insist upon the maintenance of a policy which they think will deter men from striking. It is to take from strikers the position which continued service would have preserved for them. Strike prevention is covered in another proposal which the strikers will accept. They pledge themselves to agree hereafter to the rulings of the labor board.

The labor board is to prevent strikes by settling controversies. It will if its rulings are accepted. That pledge is a public victory in this strike. It is not often that an essential public interest is distinctly advanced by a strike.

Mr. President, you have not asked the railroads to accept terms compromising the original issues of the strike. You have asked them to permit work to be resumed in the shops and allow the labor board, which they profess to support, to give a rehearing on any questions which either railroads or workers may wish to take before it. You ask that the railroads put their equipment in shape, stop the spread of the strike, give full service again, and allow the labor board to function as it is intended to do.

That is in public interest and the public will support you in forcing the railroads to agree. The question of seniority is too small to send the country to the rocks.

Americans have not felt the full severity of railroad and coal strikes. The English have. It is general misery. It means want and cold. It means lack of food and lack of heat, lack of cooked food, lack of wages, lack of necessities.

This general misery cannot be endured, Mr. President, by a country which has everything it needs to live on. It won't be endured. Coal operators and miners cannot say that they have a difference because of which no coal will be taken out of the mines. The railroad executives and the workers cannot say that they have a difference because of which no trains shall move.

It would be fatal to you to give in, Mr. Harding. Swing the big stick and they'll all come to terms.

THE ACID OF THE MOVIES.

Mack Sennett in "The Crossroads of New York" allowed himself to be almost as good as he really can be and it was a hazardous experiment with public taste in the movies. His effort was virtually wasted on Chicago, which was a pity. The Chicago movie public instantly read some Indian sign on the theater where the picture was shown, a curious instance of contagion of judgment, and remained outside. Sennett's own particular clientele seemed to be touched by it and avoided their favorite when he was at his best.

Sennett by his comedies and farces was establishing a censorship of movies by ridicule. The field in which he was operating is entirely free from moralistic censorship and needed his because it promotes misconception of life and its effects and causes. We could almost forgive D. W. Griffith his profitable offenses because he and they are stimulants of Sennett's ridicule and satire. It may be impossible to make some sentimental movie producers even plausible, but at least they were being made food for comedy, and laughter might have been an acid.

Sennett's trouble in the Crossroads was in daring to be too good. His melodrama was a massing of movie conventionalities. He missed a few things, including the child stolen by the gypsies, but not many. From his cast he produced acting which is seldom equaled on the screen, acting such as made the "Four Horsemen" distinctive. By this acting he created an effect of probability and plausibility.

One by one he invaded the choice fields of movie emotion and activity and in each case he made his satire better in acting and in employment of effects than the movie standard against which his satire was directed.

A tragedy in the white silences of the great north where men are men was covered with so fine a veil of ridicule that it still allowed the shadows of wolves falling on the snow to carry their impressive intimations. His fleeting scoundrel ran an automobile into a speeding train and dropped over a cliff with all the realism of a smash 'em up production. His poor little rich girl, who had everything and so did not know the joy of going to work of a cold winter morning, was a plausible product of wealth and gentle nurture and the surroundings of wealth were those of realism and not of Hollywood. When he touched the emotional absurdities of the movies it was done so deftly that it was an example of persuasive acting almost concealing the fact that Sennett had the sawdust all out of the doll and scattered on the floor.

We fear he will not try again soon to be his best. There were not the belt laughs, even for the Sennett following. They got those in the farce he built on "Way Down East" in the "The Small Town Idol." They got them in "Love, Honor and Behave," in "Salome" and the other roaring achievements of the farceur. It will be good fortune enough if he continues such production, but it is sad that he cannot occasionally tickle movie standards with a feather.

THE DIVISION OF WEALTH.

Future historians of our time, having the advantage of a bird's eye view of our manifold activities, will consider perhaps the most powerful movement that of the mass of mankind for a redistribution of wealth. Modern science and the genius of organization have enormously increased the wealth of the world, and while in advanced societies, like our own, the average man has a considerable share of it and enjoys comforts and luxuries which even princes did not possess in the ages before our era, nevertheless, he wants a larger share than he has. This impulse is human and in so far as it pursues constructive rather than destructive lines, it represents a beneficent force.

But there are destructive efforts to redistribute wealth. Russian bolshevism gives the outstanding example of these. Its plan was to redistribute wealth by destroying the system which in modern society produces it. Bolshevism attacked the functioning of Russian production and distribution at its source. It withdrew the motive for work and for accumulation, and both are essential to civilized society. In place of deep seated and unconquerable motives—the instinct of men to work for themselves and dependents and to enjoy the reward of their own effort—bolshevism substituted an appeal to idealist common interest, enforced by machine guns and other means of persuasion by the physical force of government. It did not work. State authority and force could not take the place of the human motive, and Russian production rapidly ran down to a point which brought famine and general demoralization. Wealth was destroyed, not distributed. The rich suffered; the poor perhaps even more.

But the movement for wider distribution of wealth takes more intelligent and effectual forms in other countries, and especially in our own. In a sense we are actually undergoing a revolution and it is being accomplished peacefully and even unconsciously. Our method has not been to equalize human fortune by reducing all to one level of misery or to prevent the accumulation of private property by depriving individuals of any reliable motive for producing wealth. We have, however, adopted measures which force a certain reasonable distribution and if they are approved by experience they will result in the reduction of enormous accumulations of wealth and prevent their indefinite passing down from generation to generation.

We have done this without paralyzing the motive for production and our method is taxation. Our income taxes with excessive graduation have not worked well and will undoubtedly be modified. Under the federal law for 1921 an income of one million paid 65 per cent back to the state and for 1922, 50 per cent. The result of excessive taxation has been evasion through investment in exempted public securities and has had other consequences injurious to enterprise. Experience has shown that we had passed the danger line, and while politics, affected by prejudice and lack of knowledge of the injurious effects of excessive graduation, has prevented adequate amendment, the tendency is in that direction. But the graduated tax on incomes will persist and if restricted within proper limits should serve as a check upon excessive accumulation without acting as a serious restraint upon the motives essential to industry and acquisition.

There is, however, another agency of distribution, the inheritance tax. Our federal law graduates up to 25 per cent at the $10,000,000 level. Various states have various rates. In Illinois inheritance by a child may bear a 14 per cent tax if over $250,000, and if the bequest is to other than a child the tax may be as high as 30 per cent. Of a great estate in this state taxes, federal and state, even when a child inherits, may take over a third. These laws combine to act as a powerful force for the redistribution of unwieldly accumulations of wealth, and when kept within proper bounds do not repress the impulse for industry and legitimate acquisition by which civilized society provides for itself.

The war debt has brought about an application of these tax principles, and the war debt will last a long time. When it is gone the system of taxation for distribution probably will be established. In its first workings in countries like Great Britain the effect is revolutionary. Great estates and great fortunes are disappearing and while the process is not so dramatic or so drastic in our country, it has made a beginning and will continue. Our task is to see that it does not take a form destructive to the general good, as it did in Russia, but while leaving the healthy human motives which are essential to production and the accumulation of reserves required by civilized life, will prevent the piling up of vast wealth in the hands of nonproducers.

Modern society requires combinations of capital on a large scale to do large scale service, but the amassment of inordinate wealth, especially through inheritance, does not square with the democratic idea. Individualist democracy will know how to deal with this problem in a beneficial, not a destructive way, avoiding foolish attempts to create by force an artificial equality and leaving the human motives for industry and thrift in healthy operation.

Every radical effort to distribute wealth in defiance of these motives has defeated itself and brought not merely failure but disaster to rich and poor alike. Russia is only the latest example of this folly.

NOVELISTS IN AMERICA.

Anatole France, the greatest living French author, says America will never produce a great novel until American writers' standards of convention have loosened up enough to permit authors to write exactly what they think.

Our condition is, however, something we must put up with probably for a long time. It is moderating appreciably in more obvious matters. The sex taboo has had some hard knocks, but the first results are not happy. The moral level of the short story and play has been lowered and the sex appeal has been viciously vulgarized for circulation purposes in some popular magazines. But we are talking of serious writing. The fact is that our inhibitions are inevitable effects of our social character, which is that of a young people preoccupied with objective accomplishments, socially in the making and therefore without the assured foundations which older societies enjoy, and, on the whole, wisely fearful of the critical habit. The cynicism and searching criticism which a mature culture finds wholesome and which produces a literature of sophistication are dubious benefits to a society which lacks the conservative forces of tradition, taste, and self-knowledge. America does well to hold fast to simpler things while it is growing. Great novels, we don't doubt, will come, but we can wait for them while we lay foundations.

This is not to underestimate the evil of the narrow moralistic spirit of censorship over private conscience which prevails so widely in this country. It is the business of writers and thinkers to fight it wherever it appears. But America cannot yet produce works of art of the kind which spring naturally and beneficently from a soil fertilized through centuries of social experience.

THE COMMUTER'S TICKET.

The August ticket brings the black cricket, the harvest fly and the katydid, the chorus of the season when mists soften the colors of fields in the setting sun and when night falls more quickly as the red candles flicker out in the woods.

August is called the silent month because the birds are moulting and have ceased to sing, but it hums and drones with serenity as if its work were only to offer ripened grains and fruits, lazily spilling them out of the horn of plenty. The cricket and harvest fly and katydid will sing on as the fields color more deeply and as the color creeps into the woods, as the late goldenrod follows the early, as the corn grows yellow and the bracken brown. They will sing to the harvest moon, and the harvest fly may sing to the hunter's moon when the thickets have again received the warblers in flight and the blackbirds have taken wing out of the elms and cottonwood.

The harvest fly's phenomenal kin, the seventeen year cicada, have left only dead twigs and limbs hanging from the oaks with dried leaves as evidence of a short existence in the light, but the fly, the two year cicada, will sing the threnody of summer.

THE LAND OF PINES.

The railroad advertisements are pleasanter reading than the railway news. The strikes which the ads describe are those which exalt the spirit of man who casts his bait upon the waters. The city dweller reads the railroad resort ads and fills his lungs with new air. A line of house tops fades out and there is a flash back to a trail.

It is mostly second growth but some of the pines are sixty or seventy-five feet high and the brush is aspen, beech, poplar, wild cherry, scrub oak, and maples. The aspen and poplar will soon begin to turn yellow and the wild cherry will turn red. Then the maple and the oak will blaze forth and there will be a scarlet conflagration against the green.

The bracken is still green and on the sandy slopes blue berries are hanging in great clusters from the short vines. You squat in the sun, touch a vine and they drop into the hand, filling it. In the tussocked swamps, tamarack rimmed, the cranberries are laid out on the moss, touched a bit with red or mottled brown. The tamarack is so dense that it almost successfully resists the efforts to plod over tussocks into the sun flooded open of the swamp. From a hill covered with hemlock of an old growth three lakes can be seen as silver in the sun. The thoroughfares wind and turn through the flags, reeds and sedges. The blackened and still standing dead of fires hold themselves far above the younger growth.

Partridge feed along the edges of the trail or under the wild cherries. Kingfishers sit on charred windfalls at the mouth of the thoroughfare or fly chattering along the shore. A crane raises its head from the reeds and a bittern arises and flies away croaking. The deer run is followed through the moss of the swamp to the edge of the lake. The waves ripple in upon the sand and through the pickerel grass and wild rice. Mallards take wing and head into the west.

The sun becomes a great ball of red and touches the western rim and night follows the glory of evening. There is nothing in the world but what the eye can see. The night wind rises with a touch of chill. The ripples of the lake freshen with it, the fragrant pines murmur more loudly and the day is done.

Editorial of the Day

[EIGHT YEARS AGO.]

THE TWILIGHT OF THE KINGS.

[Reprinted from THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Aug. 2, 1914.]

Before establishing hell on earth, the pietistic kings commend their subjects to God. Seek the Lord's sanction for the devil's work.

"And now I commend you to God," said the kaiser from his balcony to the people in the street. "Go to church and kneel before God and pray for his help for our gallant army."

Pray that a farmer dragged from his Saxon field shall be speedier with a bayonet thrust than a winemaker taken from his vines in the Aube; that a Berlin lawyer shall be steadier with the rifle than a Moscow merchant; that a machine gun manned by Heidelberg students shall not jam, and that one worked by Paris carpenters shall.

Pray that a Bavarian hop grower, armed in a quarrel in which he has no heat, shall outmarch a wheat grower from Poltava; that Cossacks from the Don shall be lured into barbed wire entanglements and caught by masked guns; that an innkeeper from Salzburg shall blow the head off a baker from the Loire.

"Go to church and pray for help"—that the hell shall be hotter in innocent Ardennes than it is in equally innocent Hessen; that it shall be hotter in innocent Kovno than in equally innocent Posen.

And the pietistic czar commends his subjects to God that they may have strength of arm in a quarrel they do not understand; that they may inflict more sufferings than they are required to endure and the name of Romanoff be greater than the name of Hohenzollern, that it may be greater than the name of Hapsburg, that its territories shall be wider, and the territories of Hohenzollern and the territories of Hapsburg less.

The pietistic emperor of Austria commends his subjects to God, to seek divine assistance to crush the peasants of Serbia, dragged from the wheat field when it was ready for the scythe and given to the scythe themselves.

This is, we think, the last call of monarchy upon divinity when Asmodeus walks in armor. The kings worship Baal and call it God, but out of the sacrifice will come, we think, a resolution firmly taken to have no more wheat growers and growers of corn, makers of wine, miners and fishers, artisans and traders, sailors and storekeepers offered up with prayer to the Almighty in a feudal slaughter, armed against each other without hate and without cause they know, or, if they knew, would give a penny which way it was determined.

This is the twilight of the kings. Western Europe of the people may be caught in this debacle, but never again. Eastern Europe of the kings will be remade and the name of God shall not give grace to a hundred square miles of broken bodies.

If divinity enters here it comes with a sword to deliver the people from the sword.

It is the twilight of the kings. The republic marches east in Europe.

HIS T. B. PILGRIMAGES.

A FEW years back we published the story of an Indiana man who, having consumption, chased the cure like a shuttlecock between Indiana and the west in a very foolish way.

He used up all his own funds, all the funds he could get his hands on, threw away whatever chance to get well he had, possibly spread infection widely, harmed himself and a good many other people, and all for the want of some common sense.

Here is a companion story which comes from the Detroit health department.

A man entered a consumption ward in the Herman Keefer hospital in 1918. He left the institution without permission after having been there only a few months.

He had an idea he would get well if he could go west.

He solicited funds for that purpose. Since that time he has repeatedly solicited funds for the purpose of going somewhere. He is armed with a letter from a physician, who states that the bearer has consumption and will go west to live if given financial assistance.

He must tell a fine story, for this is the record of his travels on collected money:

To Colorado and return, three times.
Illinois and return, three times.
To Minnesota, once.
To Iowa, once.

In addition he has been in various Detroit tuberculosis sanitaria a total of about ten different times.

Vaughan learns that for a time at least this man collected $160 a month for several months from business men.

From the standpoint of the givers this record is highly credible to the human sympathy of the business man, but not to their knowledge, judgment, and common sense.

From the standpoint of the collector, the record shows salesmanship of a high order, but that is all that can be said for it.

If the Colorado climate offered him anything, he should have stayed there. Whatever advantage there is in climate, it is only for those who settle down, become contented and happy, and fit in.

If the sanitaria in Detroit were the place for him he ought to have stayed there.

Knocking around Minnesota, Illinois, and Iowa, chasing a cure, was about the last word in foolishness.

How much consumption he spread as he traveled around there is no way of knowing.

The amount of money he has wasted could have saved the lives of several people had it been wisely used.

"Off again, on again, Finegan," is not a policy that cures consumption.

Unwise giving in this case did no good. In fact, it did harm.

GALL BLADDER SUSPECTED.

M. E. H. writes: "Please tell me the cause and remedy for excessive belching during the night. I am a middle aged woman and careful as to diet. Will this belching affect my heart?"

REPLY.

Belching which develops in the night generally means trouble in the gall bladder. The danger to your heart is not great.

COLOR BLINDNESS TRICKS.

A Sincere Reader writes: "1. Is color blindness hereditary?

"2. What causes it? Neither of the boy's parents nor grandparents is color blind. He can distinguish blue only.

"3. Would his children tend to be color blind?

"4. What is the average height of a woman? A man?"

REPLY.

1. Yes.

2. As a rule, an inability of the retina and nerves of the eye to register certain colors.

3. Color blindness, when typical, is a sex bound Mendelian recessive. It is apt to appear only in males, but to be transmitted along the female lines.

Davenport says color blind males will have no color blind sons and, typically, no color blind offspring of either sex; yet their daughters married to men of normal stock will have color blind sons.

However, the inheritance laws have many exceptions. How carefully were the eyes of parents, grandparents, uncles, aunts, and cousins examined for color blindness? Many people are color blind without suspecting it.

4. Your question cannot be answered. Men and women normally vary greatly in height, especially in this cosmopolitan nation.

LIME IN MILK USELESS.

H. A. writes: "1. Is the regular or irregular use of one teaspoonful of lime water in milk or water after meals twice a day harmful?

"2. Is the daily use of baking soda in water, as is recommended by one medicine agency, beneficial or harmful?"

REPLY.

1. Perhaps so. Moderately so. It does no good. Soft waters are somewhat better than hard waters for drinking purposes as well as for washing clothes.

2. Harmful.

SHOULD THE TEETH GO?

M. C. T. writes: "An X-ray of teeth shows three or four with pus sacks at the roots. My physician says to have them out. Dentists say to hang on to my own teeth as long as possible.

"What would you advise in a person nearly 50 years of age?

"Lately have had pains in calves of legs, seemingly in muscles, and in muscles at back of knees, which come and go. Also, soreness in muscles at sides of neck, towards the back.

"Could these pains be caused by infected teeth?"

REPLY.

Your pains could be caused by absorption of infection from your teeth. I wish I knew what to tell you to do, but I am as much at sea as you are.

I have known of cases of anemia, diabetes, Bright's disease, rheumatism and neuritis getting well after the teeth were removed.

I have known of other cases when extraction promised just as much, but where no improvement followed pulling.

Some cases that were cured showed very little under X-ray.

Some cases that were not benefited showed much.

How to tell which is which, frankly, I do not know.

STREET WILL BE OILED.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[Friend of the People.]—I live and own my own home in the 5900 block of South Sangamon street and am at a loss to know why my street is never cleaned. North of Fifty-ninth street is kept in good condition, also the neighboring streets are swept and kept in good condition. I phoned the alderman on one occasion and also the ward department without any good results. Saturday of last week, I discovered a man gathering up papers in the alley and burning them up, but he had no orders to take care of the street.

M. H.

This is a macadam street and will be cleaned preparatory to oiling right away.

THOMAS H. BYRNE,
Superintendent of Streets.

NEXT YEAR'S WORK.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[Friend of the People.]—About six months ago I inquired whether the alley north of Wrightwood avenue, between Drake and Central Park avenue was to be paved soon and the answer was that there would be a meeting called soon, of the property owners interested, to settle the matter. As far as I know there has been no meeting called for this purpose. The alley needs paving badly, and it is the only alley in the vicinity not paved. Kindly advise what has been done in this matter.

G. W.

We expect that public hearing will be held in the fall on the proposed paving of the alley between Schubert and Wrightwood, Drake and Central Park avenues. There is no chance that the improvement can be made this year, but we will do everything possible to hurry the matter along, and hope to be in a position to pave the alley next year. There have been many requests for improvements of this kind, and we are taking them in their turn and doing all we can to hurry them along.

EDWARD J. GLACKIN,
Secretary Board of Local Improvements.

100 PER CENT PROOF.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I recently made a large deposit on a diamond ring, which at the time of deposit, I was told that diamond was 100 per cent perfect. However, through recent correspondence, I am informed by the party that during his thirty-five years of business he has never come in contact with a 100 per cent perfect diamond. (This party is a first class diamond broker.) Do you agree with him that there isn't a 100 per cent perfect stone? Ring cost $1,650. Can I force him to return the deposit made on the ring?

J. E. K.

His statement was probably true in the context in which it was used. Any buyer ought to understand such a statement as simply meaning that it was an A1 stone. You probably can not force a return of the deposit.

A FLY HAVEN.

Cicero, Ill., July 31.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I have a store in Cicero and have asked the landlord for a screen door to the place. He says that he has never bought one and that he doesn't intend to buy one now. Can I have one put up and deduct the amount from the rent or should I report it to the health department?

J. P.

You could not safely count on making such reduction from your rent. We see no harm in trying reporting the facts to the health department.

LATE REVENGE.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—In 1916 a friend of mine married, not knowing that the man already had a wife in another state. Six months later his first wife obtained a divorce. My friend divorced him later, in 1920. It is just recently that she learned of his former marriage. Is it too late to have him punished for bigamy?

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

MEMORY TESTS

1. What makes cut glass so heavy? Cut glass is more than one-third lead.

2. Who was Scylla? In classical mythology a beautiful girl who through Circe's jealousy was turned into a terrible six headed monster. She lived under a rock in the sea opposite Charybdis, and every time a ship went by she stretched out her six heads and seized six men.

3. Who was Gen. Grant's most intimate friend throughout the civil war? His adjutant, Gen. John A. Rawlins. He made Rawlins secretary of war in 1869.

4. What are five synonyms for the word accumulate? Collect, garner, grow, mass, and heap.

5. What famous volcano is in Iceland? Mount Hecla.

6. What is a sea horse? A small fish about three inches long, inhabiting most warm and warm temperate seas and having a head and forepart of the body suggestive of the head and neck of a horse. It is covered with rough, bony plates and the tail is prehensile. It swims upright in the water.

7. What boy movie actor died recently? Bobby Connelly.

8. How far apart should Norway maples be planted? Plant Norway maples fifty feet apart. The spread of a Norway maple is big.

9. When did Roumania enter the world war? Roumania declared war on Austria-Hungary on Aug. 27, 1916.

10. What is flora? Fauna? The aggregate of uncultivated plants growing in a given area; as the flora of Spain. All the animals inhabiting a given area or existing within a stated period; as the fauna of Hawaii; fossil fauna.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP.

Peoria, Ill., July 29.—In all previous administrations labor troubles have been settled by deferring settlement. "Arbitration" was another name for sidestepping the issue. Our Presidents got over the difficulties by compromising or giving away the rights of the public for a peace that framed the cause of another war. In this régime the idea runs along another line. We are up against the rights of citizenship just as we were up against that right in all previous labor upheavals.

Labor unions have a right to strike and to stay struck; but men have a right to work and to be protected in that work. This right comes first before all group demands. Labor is not a thing of the union except the economic union of us all. There is no special right to work; it is a right of citizenship, and any difficulty along that line will be settled by an appeal to citizenship couched in terms of patriotism.

Union labor has refused to liquidate with the 90 per cent of us who were forced to liquidate by virtue of conditions no man nor organization can control. The war is over, but the labor union desires to continue it. The argument that living expenses have not declined is true in those things that union labor is producing. The union points to rents kept up by the $1 an hour wages of the building trades and many other prices still inordinately high on account of war wages; but this government hears the cry of the 90 per cent of us who must work for $2 per day and pay a man almost that much an hour to build the house we must live in.

Labor buys its stuff of labor. There is labor outside of the unions that also has rights. These are the rights that will be concerned in this deal.

C. LEROY WINTERS.

FOR NATIONALIZATION.

Dayton, O., July 28.—The welfare of the great people of the American public, which is composed of 97 per cent of our vast population, is constantly menaced by a mere 3 per cent composed of the monopolized interests owners of the people's national resources and factional industrial quarrels between them and the organized labor unions of this country.

Permit me to speak as one representing the public which is made to suffer and finds itself helpless in these industrial wars waged against it by these two quarreling factions in their imposition on the great American people, whom they use by eliminating the public necessities and blocading their distribution through the senseless interference of the nation's railroads.

We demand as the suffering, innocent public that our railroads and national resources which are the people's because we built and furnished the money to build the railroads and because an all wise God saw fit in his wisdom to put here along with the earth our natural resources such as coal, land, minerals, oil, water, air, etc., which are the public necessities common to all alike and should be owned by the public and by the people in common by being nationalized without further delay.

R. D. MARTIN.

ANOTHER FLOOD MAY BE NEEDED.

Fairfield, Ia., July 31.—I was surprised that "The World's Greatest Newspaper" should consider it worth while to copyright the shallow pated cartoon which appeared in the edition of last Sunday, in which the scrapping of war making means was treated as analogous to the scrapping of fire preventing means. There would be few wars of any consequence in this world if the means for stopping them were as effective as our means for stopping fires.

What we need for war is the same as in fires—less means for producing them and more means for stopping them. War can be prevented if we will only try. The United States and Canada furnish an example for the world. Three thousand miles of boundary without a fort or a gun or any other war making means, and profound peace for over a hundred years.

War is the greatest curse of the human race and if the people of the world do not have sense enough to devise some means to check it, the good Lord should bring another flood in which Noah would be chained, and then create a new race which would have a true conception of the requirements of civilization.

WILLIAM LOUDER.

POTZ'S CRIME.

Chicago, July 31.—I note with interest the communication of D. R. L. Scott in the Voice of the People, in which he assails George McGinnis for inconsistency in regard to the "Potz and Peterson" case. Mr. Scott lays the blame for the drunkenness in large measure upon Gov. Small for not appropriating more money to enforce prohibition in the state.

However, doesn't Mr. Scott realize that Potz and his party secured their booze in Kenosha, Wis.? Did Gov. Small have anything to do with preventing Potz from getting drunk in our neighboring state?

I would advise Mr. Scott to investigate the Potz trial before he condemns our governor and the Rev. George McGinnis.

CLARENCE A. JOHNSON.

LAW FROM THE TOP.

Waukegan, Ill., July 30.—Regarding your editorial of even date, "American Liberty," it seems to me you make a great bogyman out of centralized government. In matters of vital import, as the need for combating mob spirit in this country, what's the difference whether the exercise of authority comes from the state or from Washington? It's all of the same piece. You must admit the need of an anti-lynching law, but you balk at the idea of placing that law in the hands of the federal government. You insist it is better for the state to purge itself of this evil than for the cure to come from the outside. This will never come to pass. The long and shameful record of lynchings that blacken the pages of American history, with an almost total lack of punishment by local authorities, is proof to that end. Cannot THE TRIBUNE see the Herrin horror is but the logical result of all these years of do-nothingism? That it springs from the disregard for law which this long record has fostered? The disregard for law which this thing breeds is the most serious peril that threatens our country. Why not have the central government root it out, seeing that the state cannot do it?

A. H. RICHARDSON.

AMERICAN LIBERTY.

Chicago, July 30.—Your editorial in Sunday's edition entitled "American Liberty" is one of timely advice and sound philosophy and ought to be carefully studied by every American citizen.

Our individual and national liberty with its benefits handed down to us by our forefathers depend absolutely on the application and execution of the principles contained in your editorial.

LEON M. LINDEN.

NEW VALUES.

Chicago, July 31.—So long as the public continues to glorify and enlarge upon the activities of motion picture actors and actresses, just so long will the screen people be deluded into thinking that their every act and thought is being sanctioned by the public in general.

I refer, in particular, to the article occupying space on the first page of THE TRIBUNE of this date, describing the Pickford-Miller wedding and telling of how Charles Chaplin and "Doug" exercise on the road in the morning and later play about in the swimming pool and play with the rubber starfish—it is childish, to say the least. We look to THE TRIBUNE first page for important news.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

FROM "IN MEMORIAM."
By Alfred Tennyson.

O, yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;

That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain,
That not a moth with vain desire
Is shriveled in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

'WHITEWASHING' OF SCHOOL BOARD AROUSES CLUBS

Demand New Grand Jury Be Given Case.

Three separate but simultaneous attacks upon the "whitewashing" of the school board by the recently discharged July grand jury were made yesterday by organizations representative of Chicago's citizenry, who demanded of Chief Justice Kickham Scanlan that the negotiations of the old Davis-Severinghaus régime be once more exposed before the August grand jury in a final effort to bring to justice those responsible for alleged mismanagement of board affairs.

Five women, standing for the leading women's clubs of Chicago, visited Judge Scanlan yesterday morning, spending some minutes in his chambers laying their request before him. They were followed by Allen B. Pond, architect and formerly president of the City club of Chicago, and Charles M. Moderwell, president of the Chicago Public Education association, who brought a formal petition on behalf of their organizations. The third demand came in the form of a letter from the Chicago Teachers' federation, signed by the president, Miss Mary M. Abbe.

New Airing Deemed Probable.

Judge Scanlan made public no reply to these requests, saying that he would speak tomorrow when the new grand jury will be impaneled, but from his stand during the former inquiries and from the attitude of the state's attorney's office, which has promised the presentation of any fresh evidence, it is thought probable that the whole school board "scandal" may again be threshed out in a more gruelling manner than ever before.

Headed by Mrs. W. S. Hefferan, chairman of the educational committee of the Woman's City club and the Illinois League of Women Voters, the clubwomen were: Mrs. William Harrison Cade and Miss Helen Montegriffo of the Woman's City club; Mrs. Julia S. Smale of the Chicago Woman's club, and Mrs. Lewis J. Hotchkiss of the Lake View Woman's club.

Insists on Full Inquiry.

"Nothing is so much to the public interest, nothing is so fundamental, as the conduct of our schools," said Mrs. Hefferan. "If, as is charged, there has been criminal fraud on the part of the board, those responsible should be punished. We believe more evidence can and should be uncovered."

The petition of Mr. Pond and Mr. Moderwell read in part:

"The grand jury made a report to this honorable court criticizing the administration of said board of education and their dealings in contracting for supplies for the public schools and in their method of securing the same and conceding in said report the existence of administrative evils, which your petitioners represent to this honorable court were, in fact, crimes and that said grand jury refused to indict those that your petitioners believe to have been guilty of the criminal conduct referred to."

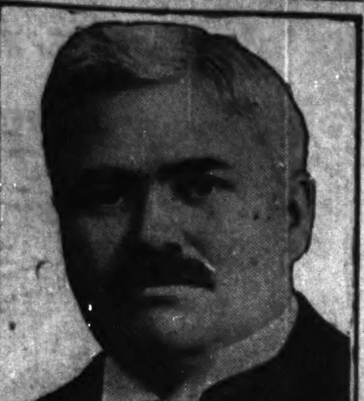
Every request spoke most highly of the work of Assistant State's Attorney Ernest S. Hodges, who has been in charge of the investigation since its inception, and asked that he be continued as the leader of further inquiry.

The letter from the Teachers' federation notified Judge Scanlan that a former resolution demanding a full investigation of the school board had been reapproved last Friday at a special meeting of the board of managers. The present state of affairs it characterized as a "festering sore that needed cleansing before it could heal."

Man Shot in Saloon Row Dies in Hospital

Harry McManus, 834 North La Salle street, died in Passavant hospital yesterday of wounds received in a gun battle in the saloon of Bert Langworthy, 866 North Wells street, Friday night. John McCarthy, 747 Diversey parkway, a saloonkeeper in the place at the time of the shooting, was questioned by Chicago avenue police.

NEW INQUIRY



W. A. Bither, former attorney for school board, one of the three officials whose records have caused demand for inquiry.

Albert Severinghaus, former school board vice president, also is named in new inquiry.

Edwin S. Davis, former president of school board, whose official acts again may be investigated by grand jury.

WHEAT FLYER FAILS TO MAKE GOOD HIS CHECK

Charged with passing a worthless check in an alleged confessed attempt to win enough by speculation to make the check good, Harry L. Beck, 28, 1720 Juneway terrace, was arrested yesterday by Sergts. Flanagan and Duffy of the detective bureau. Barsaleau company, grain commission merchants, allege the young man gave them a check for $1,100 to purchase wheat, and that the check came back from the bank marked "not sufficient funds." Beck told the police he knew his bank account was short, but that he had expected to make enough money to cover the check by the wheat transaction.

Charley Chaplin's Mother May Remain Another Year

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—Mrs. Hannah Chaplin, mother of Charles and Sydney Chaplin, will be allowed to remain in the United States for another year to take special treatment in the hope of effecting a complete recovery from a severe case of shellshock, suffered in London during German air raids. An order to this effect has been issued by the department of labor.

RECEIVER ASKED FOR MORE FIRMS HEADED BY HOOL

Sale of Bonds Bearing Liens Is Alleged.

Continuing their attacks on the building and financial activities of James A. Hool, well known realtor, Attorneys Lewis Jacobsen and Cameron Latter yesterday petitioned the Circuit court to dissolve the Hollywood Arms Building corporation, and appoint a receiver for the Hool Realty Co., and the National First Mortgage Bond Co.

Two weeks ago, as a result of a similar petition, filed by the same attorneys, a receiver was appointed for Hool, as well as the Washington Arms Building corporation, which they declared was insolvent as a result of Hool's manipulations.

Prior Liens Alleged.

Yesterday's petition, filed in behalf of Mrs. Julia Eleber, is based on the sale of bonds, of the Hollywood Arms building, at Kenmore and Hollywood avenues. It is asserted that the bonds were sold as "first mortgage bonds," when prior liens against the property existed.

An injunction to restrain Hool from collecting the $3,000 monthly rentals from the building is sought in the petition, which charges that interest due on the mortgages has been allowed to become defaulted.

Fraud Is Alleged.

Fraud and misrepresentation in the sale of securities is charged by Mrs. Eleber, who also alleges that the Hool Realty company and the National First Mortgage Bond company are "but shells and dummies" to cloak Hool's unlawful operations.

Daniel Wolfe, Martin Smithwick, E. D. Gunning, A. E. Nichols, and Roy E. Geyerstanger, officials of the several companies and associates of Hool, are named in the petition.

APRON STRINGS OF HIS MA IRK HER; WIFE SUES

"I'll not be tied to his mother's apron strings, even if he isn't man enough to break away," said Mrs. Harriet M. Armstrong, as she filed suit for divorce yesterday in the Superior court from James S. Armstrong, paint manufacturer, of Harvey, Ill.

An idyllic honeymoon was rudely interrupted, Mrs. Armstrong avers in her bill, by the advent of Armstrong's mother, who assumed control of the home and reduced the bride of two weeks to a household menial.

When forced to beg her mother-in-law for carfare, although Armstrong possesses property valued at more than $30,000, Mrs. Armstrong left her husband.

Industrial Relations New Library Idea at Princeton

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 5.—A library of industrial relations has been established at Princeton university to help fill the growing need for a special source of comprehensive information on industrial relationships and the human factor in industry, it was announced today by John Grier Hibben, president. John D. Rockefeller Jr. was announced as guarantor of the $60,000 which it is estimated the new department will cost during the first five years.

Texan Slain in Business Street; Married Man Held

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 5.—Raymond J. Blystone, 29, was shot to death today as he sat in an automobile in the heart of the business district. V. H. Shankle, 33, and married, was arrested. Blystone formerly was a lieutenant in the Reserve Signal corps.

FRENCH PREPARE FOR QUICK DASH TO GOLDEN HORN

To Bar Greeks Despite British Attitude.

BY FLOYD GIBBONS.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune]

PARIS, Aug. 5.—France is apparently rushing troops in considerable numbers to Constantinople to reinforce the 12,000 allied troops barring Greek entry to the Turkish capital.

Artillery engineers have been leaving their depot at Grenoble yesterday and today under emergency orders for Marseilles. Up to tonight none of the troops have sailed, but it is widely credited that they will be leaving for Constantinople the instant a boat is available. The deepest secrecy surrounds the destination of the troops.

Ordered to Bar Greek Advance.

In the face of Mr. Lloyd George's expressed inclination in the house of commons yesterday to allow the Greeks to enter Constantinople, the French determination to prevent the Greek occupation of the capital is deeply ominous.

French government officials frankly admitted today that 8,000 French, Algerian, and Senegalese troops along the Chatalja lines have received strict orders to prevent the Greek advance, regardless of the action of British and Italian troops.

The cynical French are summing up the situation tonight that the British are simply making Constantinople a first rate affair for trading purposes in London, the British giving concessions on reparations and getting concessions in the near east.

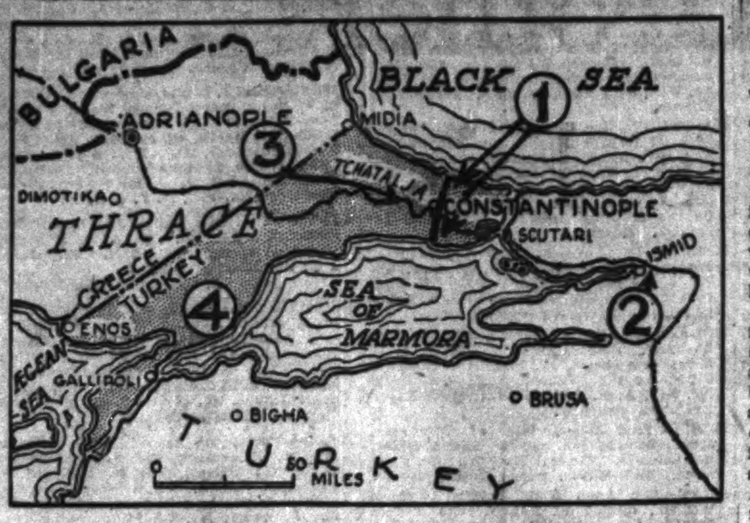
In its general aspect this is considered only one phase of the struggle between the French and British over the Mediterranean, where the bisecting of the main French and British communications route is the cause of the chief European jealousy.

Greeks Punish Officers.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—It was reported from a reliable source today that the morale of the Greek troops who have been landed at Rodosto is very unsatisfactory. One regiment is said to have mutinied at Rodosto and another to have been considerably reduced by desertions on account of bad food.

Gen. Vlahoupoulos, in command of the Greek troops along the Tchatalja line, has inflicted severe punishment upon the officers commanding the patrol which violated the neutral zone regulations early this week. Negotiations are continuing for the extension of the line of demarcation between Greek and allied troops to twenty kilometers, in order to lessen the likelihood of contact between them.

BRITISH CHECK GREEKS IN TURKEY



1. The British have occupied the Tchatalja line before Constantinople, thereby blocking the advance of the Greeks on the city.

2. Mustapha Kemal, leader of the Turks, is reported at Ismid with an army to fight the Greeks should they advance.

3. The Greeks have retreated slightly from Tchatalja upon this show of force.

4. The Greeks are agitating that Turkish Thrace be declared an autonomous state. The Turks and the allies are opposed to this.

FEARS STAGNATION, MOTHER OF SIX AT 71 GOES TO COLUMBIA

New York, Aug. 5.—Mrs. A. P. Crawford of Greensboro, N. C., has entered Columbia university's summer school at the age of 71 because she thinks there is no need to grow old mentally.

Fifty years ago she was graduated from Vassar college. Now she is the mother of six, three of them school teachers.

"Stagnation and intolerance are one's greatest enemies in keeping young," she said today. "These changing times demand new viewpoints, and the woman of today must keep well informed as part of her duty as a citizen."

MEXICANS ROUT REBEL FORCES IN SEVERAL FIGHTS

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

Mexico City, Aug. 5.—Rebels under Gen. Jimenez engaged in a fight with federals yesterday near the Chicago ranch in the state of Vera Cruz. They attempted to capture the ranch, but the intervention of the federals saved the American property.

Forces of rebels under Gen. Margarito Ortiz attacked federals at San José yesterday, but were defeated. Gen. Adolfo Palma, rebel leader in southern Vera Cruz, was defeated at Coscomatepec by troops of the 52d regiment yesterday. The federals had been following Palma for over a week, when the latter suddenly attacked them.

Rebel Gens. Aleman and Lara, who were several times defeated, have requested permission to surrender. Both were reported wounded and sick and practically deserted by their followers.

Manila Americans Hit Fake Report in America

MANILA, Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—The American chamber of commerce today denied reports contained in dispatches from the United States and published in the local Filipine papers that the chamber had circularized all the American chambers of commerce, requesting them to boycott the Filipino mission, which recently presented a plea for independence to President Harding. The local chamber's statement declared the report "an absolute and unqualified falsehood."

Another Suspect Taken in $10,000 Gem Theft

Paul Weinberg, 2122 South Lawndale avenue, was arrested in the Rice hotel, Dearborn street and Chicago avenue, yesterday in connection with the recent $10,000 jewel robbery on the great lakes steamer, Puritan, of Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Lauretzen, 5963 Kenmore avenue. Weinberg is said to have confessed that he pawned a diamond that was identified as part of the loot but said he received it from William Gordon, wheelman of the ship, now in custody.

WOMEN'S FEUD OVER GIRDLE ENDS IN HAIR PULLING

Hair pulling and numerous threats to kill—all over the cleaning of a dress—were alleged by Mrs. John E. Garrity, 5852 Sheridan road, who appeared in the Chicago avenue court yesterday to obtain a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Katherine Zaridski, 6727 Sheridan road.

Mrs. Garrity wants Mrs Zaridski paced under a peace bond. She stated that a year ago she sent a dress to the establishment of Mrs. Zaridski's husband to be cleaned. The dress came back minus a sash or girdle. She refused to pay the bill, and since Mrs. Zaridski has been constantly "annoying" her. The final encounter was Thursday night, when Mrs. Zaridski resorted to the hair pulling and the threats to kill.

EDITH KELLY GOULD MAY HEAD PARIS DANCERY

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

EDITH KELLY GOULD.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—[By Tribune Wireless.]—Edith Kelly Gould may become hostess in the biggest, most exclusive, costliest night club in Paris. A syndicate, backed by wealthy American women in Paris, has offered an attractive contract for her to act as hostess at a special dance given by a new supper and dance club opening this fall in Champs Elysees, near the Etoile in a big mansion which has just been leased.

Mrs. Gould is hesitating, fearing that her former husband, who is influential in Paris through his racing activities and social functions, may object and seek to wreck the club through influencing his friends not to patronize it.

"It is rather a delicate matter," said Edith today. "I know the French, English, and American sets in Paris socially, but it might be different, if I were hostess or a professional dancer."

The new club will have the first roof garden in Paris, obtained by permission from the police, and will be open nightly.

Mrs. Gould will leave London for Deauville tomorrow.

Youth Accuses Two Girls and Man of Robbing Him

Flint, Mich., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Robbed of his money and thrown from an automobile on a lonely country road by two girls and a man who had invited him for a ride was the tale told police today by Leslie Lonsberry, 17, high school student, after he walked to the city. Irene Sharp, 20, Detroit, and Nellie Smith, 24, of Cleveland, O., and Jack Ferrias, confectioner, were arrested and are held in $500 bail each. Lonsberry claims Irene hit him in the jaw and a free for all fight ensued.

Col. McIntosh Financial Head of Shipping Board

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Col. J. W. McIntosh of Illinois has been appointed director of finance of the United States shipping board, it was announced today. He takes the place of H. S. Kimball, resigned.

Commander Frucht Quits Great Lakes for Sea Duty

Commander M. M. Frucht, executive officer at the Great Lakes Naval Training station for the last twenty-eight months, left there yesterday to take a similar position aboard the battleship New York, now in the Pacific fleet. His successor has not yet been named.

HAVE they a playground?—other than the street—or the neighborhood vacant lot where their lives and character are in constant danger? Won't you give them at least the protection of a real home? A playground of their own—safety, health and happiness?

RIVERSIDE

With its winding streets—wide, deep lots—50x275—is the ideal spot for a childhood home.

Quick Transportation to Loop by Steam—Surface Lines—Elevated—Boulevards

The History of Riverside

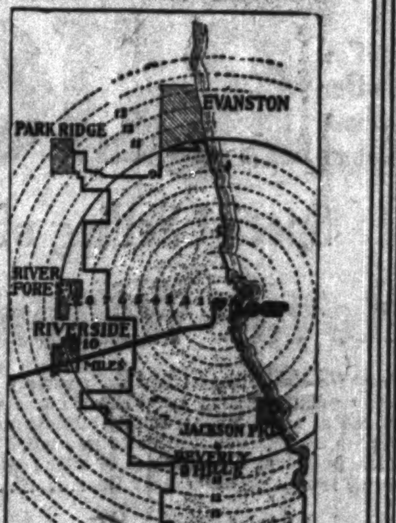
A number of years ago Mr. Frederick Olmsted, celebrated as the designer of the World's Fair Grounds in Chicago, conceived the idea of laying out the most beautiful suburb to be found anywhere—and he chose the winding Des Plaines River—the site of Riverside—as the ideal location for it. This beautiful area with its winding river, wooded banks and high elevation has developed into a community of distinction—both physically and socially—and it is good fortune, indeed, that permits us to offer a few remaining homesites to American residents of Chicago.

Environment

Riverside Beautiful offers every advantage that could be asked for in a homesite. There are schools, churches, markets, amusements and diversion—the Forest Preserve and Zoological Gardens are just a few minutes distant—a country club, pure water, excellent transportation and village municipal government—all of these things contribute to its charm. On the other hand—there are no factories, no smoke, no dirt. A delightful spot for the man who wants the best for his family.

Transportation

A glance at the map at the right will indicate that Riverside is really right in the heart of growing Chicago. Sixty-six trains a day provide twenty-four minute transportation to the loop—at a nine cent fare, and a comfortable seat assured. Elevated and surface lines reach Riverside—and are handy for those whose business confines them to the south and west sides. A fine boulevard via Washington Blvd. and Des Plaines Ave. to the heart of Riverside. The new Ogden Ave. improvement project runs directly into the village.



RADIUS MAP of CHICAGO
SHOWING LOCATION OF RIVERSIDE AND OTHER SUBURBS

Restrictions

Building restrictions are controlled by the village board—and are administered so satisfactorily that Riverside has come to be known as the show place of the Chicago district—the most beautiful of Chicago's many charming residential communities.

In Conclusion

Consider the many advantages of Riverside—the charming environment that it offers for your family, the quick and modern transportation facilities, the well regulated building restrictions—and in addition, consider the fact that these lots are fully improved with water, sewer, gas, electricity, sidewalks, paved streets—and all improvements paid for in full. Priced within the buying power of the most modest homeseeker, these fine lots surely offer an opportunity for homeseeker and investor alike that is truly remarkable.

Let us show you Riverside without obligating you in the least. Mail the right hand coupon—or bring the left hand coupon to the C., B. & Q. suburban station at Jackson and Canal Streets on Sunday—our representative will give you free transportation to Riverside.

SURVEY REVEALS SEAWAY WOULD HELP ALL U. S.

Vast Electric Development Share of Northeast.

BY PARKE BROWN.

While the middle west and Illinois in particular would reap specific advantages from the construction of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, New York state and New England would gain so much in cheap hydroelectric power that the whole country will be benefited by the added prosperity of these two regions.

This was the nub of the official report of the Illinois Deep Waterway commission, made public yesterday following its study trip down the St. Lawrence last month. It was signed by William Nelson Pelouze, chairman, and the eight other members of the commission.

"We enthusiastically commend the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway to the favorable support of all citizens of Illinois," read the last paragraph of the report. "We ask the cooperation of the press and of all associations and clubs, both social and commercial, to the end that the combined efforts may be influential in bringing to a successful fruition this great accomplishment in the interest and for the welfare of our commonwealth."

Points Out Benefits.

Reviewing some of the benefits that would follow the completion of the project, the commission said:

"The economic benefit of the St. Lawrence improvement to the undeveloped west is beyond all calculation. It is known that the improvements at the Soo have paid for themselves several times over in one season in the actual freight saved. We cannot attempt to estimate what the saving of the proposed St. Lawrence river improvement will be, nor to make any reckoning of the values that will be created and which will result by reason of the improvement.

"As a single instance, the average grain production in the area influenced by this lake route is 3,664,000,000 bushels annually. The saving in freight on export grain will be approximately 7 cents a bushel. The price of the crop is fixed by the price of the surplus. If only half this saving were to attach to the producer, whose price is always the price at market less cost of transportation, the position of the American farmer would be improved in the case of grain alone by not less than $128,000,000.

Saving on Industrial Products.

"To this great saving on grain alone, if we add the saving in freight on the shipment of our industrial products, some idea may be gained of what this great St. Lawrence project really means to the producers of this country from the standpoint of dollars and cents.

"There is more involved than the saving in freight rates. New opportunities will be opened by the new lines of communication. It will afford to the manufacturers of the middle west a road to markets that are now closed to them; it will form an avenue by which they may draw raw materials from all parts of the world which are now inaccessible to them. The benefits can be indicated, but they are beyond calculation."

Value of Electricity.

Taking up the benefits in the form of hydo-electric developement the report said:

"The power development is capable of reduction to more precise terms. The potential energy of the St. Lawrence river, to be developed as soon as the market is ready to absorb it, will be 4,100,000 horsepower. This may be translated into an annual output of 26,000,000,000 kilowatt hours at the bus bar and more than 24,000,000,000 kilowatt hours after transmission to the point of application.

"This is equal to the energy which can be produced from 24,000,000 tons of coal burned in the most modern steam plant or 36,000,000 tons burned under the boilers of an average mill. It represents the continuous effort in handling of over 100,000 human beings in mining and transportation.

Benefit to Chicago.

"Illinois in general and Chicago in particular should benefit to a greater extent than any other locality because the western terminal of the great St. Lawrence route will be at our door. Its value will be inestimable to the industrial and agricultural interests of Illinois."

The commission included an excerpt of a consultation with Chief Engineer W. A. Bowden of the division of railways and canals of the Canadian government, who, with Col W. P. Wooten of the United States engineer corps, made the report upon the St. Lawrence project which Governor Miller of New York criticized as "superficial."

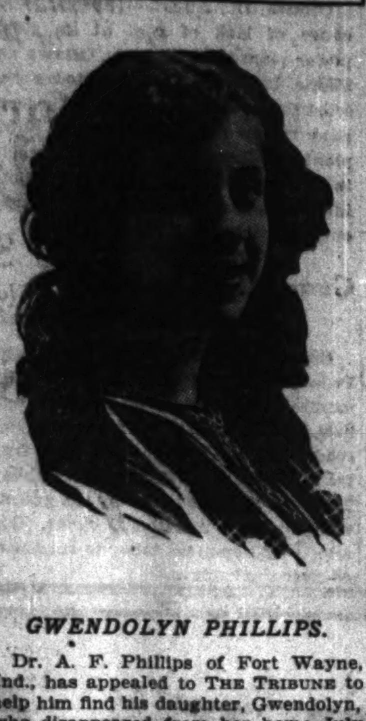
Denies Inquiry is "Casual."

"He (Mr. Bowden) stated substantially that the investigation made by the engineers was neither casual nor superficial, but was most thorough, scientific and conclusive," the report states. "He stated that no body of water on the American continent was so thoroughly and scientifically known as to its engineering features as the St. Lawrence river, and that the subsurface and substrata covering the entire route of the proposed St. Lawrence project was absolutely known.

"The data is on hand covering every engineering problem that would be involved in carrying out the St. Lawrence project and is so well understood and so thoroughly conclusive that the engineers are ready to commence their work without delay at any time.

"This should set at rest for all time the doubt or contention of those disposed for one reason or another to profess their belief that the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway is not practical or feasible from an engineering standpoint."

DISAPPEARS



GWENDOLYN PHILLIPS.

Dr. A. F. Phillips of Fort Wayne, Ind., has appealed to THE TRIBUNE to help him find his daughter, Gwendolyn, who disappeared from her home July 28. She was last seen in Toledo, O., where all trace of her vanished.

Dr. Phillips sent the following description of his daughter:

"She is 15 years old, 5 feet 3 inches tall, and weighs about 90 pounds. Her hair and eyes are brown. When she left she was wearing a dark blouse and skirt, white canvas shoes, with dark trimmings."

VAST DECLINE IN COAL OUTPUT IS SPUR TO SPENCER

States Told to Conserve Dwindling Stocks.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—With the weekly coal output 6,000,000 tons below normal, Federal Distributor Spencer today wrote to the governors of various states outlining further emergency measures for the conservation and distribution of fuel.

"Governors' committees," Mr. Spencer said, "are requested to apply for coal produced in other states only through the federal fuel distributor at Washington and not to order any coal from federal fuel district committees or producers outside their own state.

"There is no anthracite coal available for distribution by the federal fuel distributor.

No Fuel for Storage.

"Application for emergency coal to the federal fuel distributor should be made only for current use and not for storage. Application for emergency coal should be made only for the most essential purposes following the priority classes established by the interstate commerce commission."

A slight increase in output has marked the eighteenth week of the coal strike, July 31-Aug. 5, according to the weekly bulletin of the geological survey. Preliminary returns indicate a production of 4,250,000 tons of soft coal against 3,933,000 tons in the week before. The increase is due to improved car supply in the middle Appalachian fields rather than to reopening of mines hitherto closed by the strike.

In spite of the increase in bituminous output, the eighteenth week finds production still about 1,100,000 tons short of the level reached before the shopmen's strike, for in the week ending June 24, 5,337,000 tons were raised.

Hard Coal Output Drops.

Production of anthracite in the eighteenth week will be barely 30,000 tons, from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 tons below normal.

Profiteering in coal has been virtually eliminated by government governing agencies, Secretary of Commerce Hoover announced today.

SHORTAGE OF COAL CURTAILS OPERATIONS OF YOUNGSTOWN MILLS

Youngstown, O., Aug. 5.—Announcement of curtailing of operations of three steel mills, throwing 2,700 men out of work, on account of coal shortage, was made here today. All departments of the Farrell, Pa., works of the Carnegie Steel company except one blast furnace will suspend tonight. Twelve hundred men will be out of work.

The Youngstown Sheet and Tube company will bank one blast furnace, close its Bessemer department, one blooming mill and two open hearth furnaces. The Republic Iron and Steel company will close three open hearth furnaces and two bar mills. Fifteen hundred men will leave the two companies.

Railroad in South to Use Gasoline Propelled Cars

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 5.—The management of the Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia railroad announced here today that gasoline propelled cars would be placed in service on the system, the first one to begin trips on Sept. 1, to be followed by others if the plan proved successful.

Rail Guards Held When Switchmen Charge Attack

Evansville, Ind., Aug. 5.—Five Illinois Central railroad guards were under arrest here today, charged with assault and battery with intent to kill two switchmen.

PICK AND SHOVEL UNCOVER COAL IN SHADOW OF GUNS

Indiana Strip Mines Open Under Martial Law.

Brazil, Ind., Aug. 5.—[United Press.]—The test in state operation of coal mines under martial law came today.

A handful of imported laborers started digging in two strip mines near here, while 800 national guardsmen stood by to prevent interference by striking miners.

"Three hundred tons will go out today," representatives of the state coal emergency committee declared.

Coal mined will be rushed to canning factories, state institutions, and private industries.

Empty Cars on Switch.

Six empty cars were on a railroad side track at strip mines Nos. 8 and 9 of the Rowland Power Collieries company, which Gov. McCray seized in his effort to relieve the coal shortage.

The soldiers are patrolling the properties of the Rowland Power company in four counties to prevent possible retaliatory action against idle miners.

There has been no disorder since Thursday night, when outposts were fired upon.

A truck carrying a machine gun and a detachment of soldiers, followed by an automobile with officers, stopped in Linton late yesterday and brought forth a storm of protest.

300 More Guards Coming.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 5.—Three hundred more officers and men of the Indiana National guard were en route from Camp Knox, Ky., today to the coal fields for duty in the state's effort to mine coal under martial law.

The men will reinforce the 800 troops now there. They comprise the 3d battalion of the 151st infantry, which has been training at Camp Knox. They are under command of Maj. James E. Rodenbeck of Attica.

COAL PEACE HOPE TURNS TO PARLEY AS CRISIS MOUNTS

Chicago Now Feeling Famine's Touch.

exert real pressure upon the consuming public. It has been talked of for months.

One tentative survey leads some retail experts to declare that for ordinary consumers there is less than a two weeks' supply on hand and that is unevenly distributed. The railroads in general have about twenty days' supply on hand, supplemented by what they can manage to confiscate en route. The big industrial consumers are in better shape, but already many smaller concerns are going to half time operation and reduced employment. The Commonwealth Edison company, which is better stocked than any one else, has thirty-six days 'supply in the bins and ten days' supply rolling. It now furnishes about 35 per cent of the industrial power used in the Chicago district and 70 per cent of the electrical power. The Public Service Company of Northern Illinois, serving fifteen counties in the northeastern part of the state, has about the same amount on hand and industries which use electrical current are protected.

Apparently the big industries and utilities have about thirty days' supply. Some concerns have put in oil burners. The sanitary district reports two weeks' fuel supply on hand; the federal building has enough to run until Sept. 15; Cook county institutions have three months' supply; the municipal government has sixty days' supply.

Dealers Criticize Hoover.

The steel mills are feeling the pinch, and furnaces are being shut down at Gary and South Chicago. The Joliet mills are up against it and are letting furnaces die out.

Dealers in general say that if the strike were settled tomorrow, domestic users would still feel a pinch when cold weather sets in. Some retailers are disposed to criticize Secretary Hoover. They say before he launched his fuel administration plans they managed to get some coal for deliveries, but since then they have got next to nothing for domestic users.

Dealers report that little coal is offered today and that is mostly mine run, but the prices vary from $9 to $12 at the mine. Adding the freight of $3.25, makes the coal on cars, Chicago, $12 to $15 a ton. And at that it is mine run coal, not particularly fitted for consumption by the ordinary user. As to anthracite, they say no matter how soon the big industrial disputes are settled, Chicago can expect little or no hard coal for the rest of the year.

Coal Consumers to Meet.

The situation is regarded as so serious that the Association of Commerce will hold a conference of coal consumers tomorrow afternoon to find out the exact coal situation in the city and what can be done for relief.

Harry A. Wheeler, vice-president of the Union Trust company, it became known yesterday, has been offered the chairmanship of the Cook county fuel administration. He postponed acceptance pending the outcome of the Cleveland conference and the offer of the Illinois operators to the miners. Robert Medill, state coal commissioner, has called a conference of civic and industrial organizations for tomorrow to take up the situation.

OWNERS AND MEN DIFFER ON MINE MEETING PLANS

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—The efforts of the United Mine Workers to end the coal strike by bringing the operators of the central competitive field into conference at Cleveland Monday will be futile, the bituminous coal operators' information bureau predicted in a statement tonight. Only a minority of the tonnage in that region will be represented, it was stated, and the meeting will be a "small affair."

On the other hand, representatives of the United Mine Workers, who left here today to attend the conference, declared that they believed the meeting would be a success.

Bishop Kilzo Is Improved After His Heart Attack

Charlotte, N. C., Aug. 5.—Bishop J. C. Kilgo was reported this morning as having greatly improved during the night from the sudden heart affliction he suffered twenty-four hours previously and to have passed the danger point.

Coal Shortage Cuts Off 14 Illinois Interurban Trains

Ottawa, Ill., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Because of lack of coal at its steam power plants, the Chicago, Ottawa and Peoria Interurban railway today canceled fourteen of its trains. The company is now relying on a water power plant at Marseilles. Twenty factories in Ottawa, La Salle, Peru and adjoining towns may be deprived of electric current early next week.

Guards Foil Raid of Strikers with Dynamite

Brownsville, Pa., Aug. 5.—[United Press.]—Attempt of seven men to dynamite Black's bridge on the Monongahela branch of the Pennsylvania railroad, near McClellandtown, was frustrated by railroad police early today. Twenty shots were fired by the guards, who put the dynamiters to flight. Coal mined by nonunion labor is transported over the bridges.

Studebaker

The reasons why

This is a Studebaker Year

What Automobile Buyers Generally Want:

In a recent poll of 20,000 car owners by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, Inc., of New York (the automobile manufacturers' trade association), each owner was asked to name the quality which appealed to him most in buying a car. The results showed as follows:

1. Endurance	15.0%	8. Flexibility	6.5%
2. Economy of operation	14.0%	9. Endorsement of car by others	6.5%
3. Comfort	9.5%	10. Specifications	6.0%
4. Price	9.5%	11. Speed	5.5%
5. Appearance	8.0%	12. Appointments	5.0%
6. Service facilities of manufacturer	7.5%
7. Hill climbing or power	7.0%
	70.5%		29.5%

This poll confirms Studebaker's experience of seventy years in building vehicles of all kinds. Studebaker Cars have been and always will be designed and manufactured to meet the qualifications demanded by the public as emphasized by the Chamber survey.

The Proof of Studebaker Quality:

1. Endurance. Studebaker Cars are daily giving satisfactory service to 400,000 owners in all civilized countries. Proof of their dependability rests upon the fact that our sales of Repair Parts, covering repairs from accidents as well as service, for the past seven months averaged but $7.00 per car. Up to August 1st, 1922, we produced and sold 550,000 Studebaker Cars, and are now producing and selling at the rate of 125,000 cars per year, practically double last year's volume, and yet our total sales of Repair Parts this year are less than they were for the first seven months of 1919.

2. Economy of Operation. Greatest economy results from minimum repairs and high resale values of second-hand cars in proportion to list prices. Gasoline and oil consumption are next important items of economy. The records of Studebaker Cars in all these respects stand out strikingly well.

3. Comfort. Correct design of weight distribution, spring suspension, seats, upholstery, etc., determine largely the question of comfort. Comfort is not a matter of extra cost and high prices, but is a matter of design. Comfort is characteristic of Studebaker Cars. Heavy weight is neither essential to comfort nor an assurance of it if design is faulty. The weight of Studebaker Cars is borne almost equally by the four wheels, which is ideal distribution. With bodies resting without overhang on frames, semi-elliptic springs, seats of generous proportions, and best upholstery, Studebaker Cars are necessarily comfortable.

4. Price. With $78,000,000 of actual net assets, including $38,000,000 of plants, and an organization of able, experienced men and workers who participate in the profits of the business, Studebaker stands unsurpassed in resources and ability to manufacture economically and give maximum intrinsic value for a given price. By manufacturing complete motors, transmissions, axles, frames, bodies, tops, castings, forgings, and stampings, parts makers' profits on such items are eliminated, and one profit only is included in Studebaker prices. The South Bend plants formerly devoted to the manufacture of horse-drawn vehicles, with recent additions, now manufacture sedan and coupe bodies, at minimum costs (without middlemen's profits), and buyers benefit accordingly.

The materials and workmanship in Studebaker Cars measure up to the highest standards known to the automobile industry. Substantially better intrinsic values cannot be obtained at any price. The theory that high prices necessarily mean fine cars is fallacious, simply because prices are not based upon intrinsic values but upon the production costs of different manufacturers, which vary widely according to their individual manufacturing facilities, ability, and output. Everybody in the automobile industry knows that standardized cars manufactured complete in large quantities give the greatest intrinsic values, or stated otherwise, the most actual car, per dollar of price. Assembled cars, which constitute eighty-five per cent of the hundred-odd makes of American cars, are assembled from parts purchased from many sources, which precludes harmonious co-ordination in design and inevitably increases costs and selling prices about 25%.

5. Appearance. An automobile should never be bought on appearance, although seemingly 8% of buyers are influenced by appearance alone. An automobile is a highly developed mechanical instrument from which hard, satisfactory service is rightly expected. Studebaker executives and engineers give much attention to appearance, style, and distinctive beauty in the matter of tops, hoods, radiators, and fenders (the dress of an automobile). Our bodies are masterpieces of fine craftsmanship, and are unexcelled for comfort and durability.

6. Service. Studebaker has 3,000 branches and dealers in the United States, and is widely represented in all foreign countries. These branches and dealers carry in stock $4,000,000 of Repair Parts for all models of Studebaker Cars. The prices of parts for Studebaker Cars are lower (or as low) as those of any cars of their price, and much lower than those of high-priced cars. Studebaker branches and dealers are obligated to render prompt and efficient service to buyers. Studebaker is in business to sell motor cars and not parts. The accessibility of Studebaker Cars for quick dismounting and repair work is common knowledge in the garages and among chauffeurs and mechanics all over the world.

7. Power. In acceleration, power delivered at the point of traction, and hill climbing ability, all three models of Studebaker Cars enjoy unique reputations.

8-12. Sundries. The other qualities which seemingly influenced the selections of 29.5% of buyers are flexibility, endorsement of others, specifications, speed, and appointments. Studebaker Cars stand high in all these respects. Studebaker Cars have set many precedents in quantity manufacture, particularly in the matter of appointments and equipment, such as crown fenders, cast en bloc six-cylinder motors, cord tires, one-piece windshield, cowl ventilator, cowl lights, tonneau lamp with extension cord, windshield wiper, transmission locks, beveled plate glass windows, etc. Satisfied owners are Studebaker's greatest asset.

The broad principle upon which Studebaker business is conducted and upon which it has prospered for seventy years, now grounded upon tradition, insures satisfaction to everybody who deals with the House of Studebaker, and we solicit your valued patronage on this basis. This policy protects you better than the ordinary guarantee.

G. O. P. HAS EYE ON SENATE SEAT FROM LONE STAR

Split of the Democrats Gives Chance.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Administration leaders who have been watching the remarkable political embroglio which has developed in Texas are of the opinion that this may afford an opportunity for winning a Republican senator, even in such a Democratic stronghold as the Lone Star state.

With the Democrats divided, as it is inevitable that they will be on such intense issues as the Ku Klux Klan and modification of the Volstead law, there is reason to assume that an independent Republican would be a strong contender in November.

With the primaries in the middle west disposed of this week, much interest will be felt in this run-off primary in Texas, which occurs Aug. 26. The contenders for senatorial honors are Earle B. Mayfield of Austin, at present a member of the state railroad commission, who is expected to have the support of the militant prohibitionists as well as the Klu Klux Klan, and James E. Ferguson of Temple, the governor who was impeached but who has staged a wonderful comeback.

Ferguson on "Wet" Platform.

Ferguson is running on a light wine and beer platform and is the hope of the considerable faction among Texas Democrats who feel that victory for the Ku Klux Klan is a menace to the orderly rocesses of good government.

The clash of advocates of these two leaders, holding ideas so diametrically opposed, is bound to result in a breach of considerable magnitude in the Democratic ranks of Texas. So much so, in fact, that plans already are in the making to contest the right of either one to a seat in the senate, regardless of which is victorious. The certainty of such a contest, the result of which would long be in doubt, is looked upon as another factor to aid a Republican candidate.

Wayne B. Wheeler, counsel for the Anti-Saloon league, an organization which wields more power than any other one agency in Washington outside of the government, has declared his intention of fighting Ferguson "at every turn of the road." He insists Ferguson is unfit to sit in the senate, and says that if elected the Texan's right to do so will be challenged on the ground that he was impeached and removed from office by the legislature of his state.

There are some senators who are inclined to doubt such a fight could be waged successfully against Ferguson, particularly when it could be shown that politics entered into his impeachment, but the Anti-Saloon league has a way of winning that is characterized as uncanny.

Mayfield a Ku Klux?

However, should it be Mayfield, he, too, would be compelled to run the gauntlet of senatorial investigation on the basis of his Ku Klux connection. It has been repeatedly charged that Mayfield is a member of the klan and as such has taken an oath which will preclude the one required as United States senator.

A similar contest was filed in 1903, when Reed Smoot of Utah first came to the senate. It was charged that as an apostle in the Mormon church he had taken an oath which made him ineligible as United States senator.

Moreover, it should be borne in mind that Smoot was a Republican, tried by a body in which the majority were members of his party, the senate dividing in his case, 28 to 42.

Mayfield would have no such advantage. In fact, the reverse would be true, as he could hardly count on the vote of four Democratic senators who are members of the Catholic church, the curbing of which is a cardinal principle of the Ku Klux Klan.

FOREST PRESERVE TREASURY NOW IS BOSSED BY CORR

FRANK J. CORR.

Succeeding Oscar F. Mayer, wealthy packer, who left several days ago on an extended vacation in Europe, Attorney Frank J. Corr, 6217 Normal boulevard, was appointed treasurer of the forest preserve district of Cook county. Mr. Corr furnished bonds of $50,000, which were accepted yesterday.

Mr. Mayer was appointed during the régime of the late Peter Reinberg as president of the county board and of forest preserve commissioners, and his resignation was accepted with reluctance, President Daniel Ryan said.

Teachers on Coast Hike in Hospital After Wreck

With two members of the party in a hospital at Rochester, Minn., and the third slightly hurt when a motor bus capsized, the plans of two Chicago school teachers and the sister of one of them to walk to Yellowstone park have been wrecked.

The two who are in the hospital are Mabel McCreedy, teacher in the Lane Technical high school, and Barnardine Bristol, University of Iowa student. Miss Bess Bristol, instructor in the Mitchell school, is nursing minor injuries. The party started from Chicago a month ago and walked to Minneapolis. At the time of the accident they were riding a motor bus from St. Paul to Rochester, Minn.

BUCKEYE STATE HAS 69 SEEKING NOMINATIONS

Columbus, O., Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—Ohio's free-for-all pre-primary campaign, participated in by sixty-nine candidates for state officers closed tonight. Next week the voters will face three major issues when they go to the polls—wet and dry, labor, and progressive. Not in years have the issues been more sharply drawn and never before has there been such a gallery of candidates.

Main interest in the Republican gubernatoriol fight appears to be in the probable strength of two wine and beer candidates and one liberal candidate, and in the ability of President Harding's choice to hold his own against two Progressives.

Carmi A. Thompson of Cleveland, former treasurer of the United States and said to be the national administration's choice for the nomination, has drawn the fire of practically the entire field of other candidates.

Progressives in Field.

Congressman Charles L. Knight of Akron, publisher, and Daniel A. Williams of Jackson, publisher, are the Progressive candidates. Both were Roosevelt men in 1912 and both have made a strong appeal for the Progressive vote.

C. Homer Durand of Coshocton, former wet leader, made his campaign on a wine and beer platform, as did J. W. Durnell of Columbus. Harvey C. Smith of Zanesville, now serving his second term as secretary of state, also is credited by the Anti-Saloon league with being a wet.

Only three candidates are participating for the Democratic nomination for governor: Former State Auditor A. V. Donahey of New Philadelphia, James G. Johnson of Springfield, the man who nominated James M. Cox for the presidency at the San Francisco convention two years ago, and Thomas J. Duffey of East Liverpool.

R. R. Unions Fight Pomerene, Fess.

Considerable of a fight has been made against the renomination of Senator Atlee Pomerene, Democrat. The big five railroad brotherhood chiefs this week urged friends of organized labor to vote for Pomerene's only opponent, former Congressman John J. Lentz of Columbus, president of the American Insurance union. Congressman Simeon D. Fess, former chairman of the Republican national congressional committee, is being backed by the drys for the Republican senatorial nomination, but with Senator Pomerene has drawn the fire of the railroad brotherhoods, who have urged the nomination of former Senator Charles Dick of Akron.

DRYS GAIN VOTES IN 17 PRIMARIES, WHEELER SAYS

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—The claim that gains are in prospect for the dry forces in both the senate and house as the result of the primaries held to date, was made tonight in a statement issued by Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon league.

"Seventeen states, not counting Kentucky, have held primary elections," said Mr. Wheeler. "Thirteen United States senators have been nominated, of which nine senators were renominated, seven of the nine have stood for prohibition enforcement. The four new nominees are for enforcement.

One hundred and sixty-three congressmen have been renominated, of whom 128 have voted for prohibition enforcement legislation and twenty-five against it. Of the new nominations about one-third are considered wet or doubtful."

FIRE IN BREVOORT HOTEL.

DAY'S DEATH TOLL OF AUTOMOBILES 2 MEN, 1 WOMAN

Miss Helen Quanstrom, 1376 East 62nd street, was killed yesterday when an automobile in which she was riding collided with another at 56th street and Dorchester avenue.

Peter Grendahl, 3724 Sunnyside avenue, died yesterday morning of a fractured skull received Friday night when he was hit by a taxicab.

Aaron Field, 84 years old, 2135 Haddon court, died at German Deaconess hospital. He was struck while crossing Division street by a car driven by Lawrence Foss, 1214 North Robey street. The driver is being held.

Auto Hits Freight; Woman Dies.

Hammond, Ind., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—One woman was killed instantly, another seriously injured, and two men are near death as the result of an auto crashing into a C. I. and S. freight near Cook early this morning. The dead woman is Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson of Brook, Ind. Authorities say they found evidence in the car that the party was joy riding. The speedometer stopped at 60 miles an hour.

Park Harbor Master Dies Suddenly on Boat

Samuel Peterson, 57 years old, harbor master at Jackson Park, was found dead yesterday afternoon in the cabin of the Santa Marie, the replica of the boat used by Columbus and which gained fame during the world's fair. Death was due to heart failure, according to police. Peterson had been detailed to watch over the boat, which, with two sister ships, has been moored in the harbor for many years.

"But There's One Thing I Do Envy You"

Said the Woman Who Lives in a House of Her Own to the Woman Who Lives in an Apartment—

"—you always have all the hot water you want—any hour of the day or night. I should think you'd just revel in it."

The Woman who lives in an Apartment wasn't thinking of that. Her friend's lovely Colonial home was so perfect that she had forgotten such plain, every-day, practical things as Hot Water. She had become so accustomed to a plentiful supply that she just took it for granted. Whenever she turned a hot water faucet, hot water came running out. What would you expect?

But to any woman who lives in a house of her own the problem of having plenty of hot water at all times in kitchen, laundry and bath is seldom out of her mind. All the hot water she wants—whenever she wants it—is a fond dream that never seems to be realized.

There is a way out for all these women. Every bit as convenient as in an apartment, where the Landlord foots the bill—and passes it cheerfully on when the rent comes due. You can have all the hot water you want for every household need. You can have hot water whenever you want it—the instant you want it. And at lower gallon for gallon cost than you are paying now for your present haphazard, insufficient supply. And get it by the simple process of turning a faucet—not another thing.

Just do what thousands of other home-keeping women have done before you—put in a

Take Mastin's Vitamon To Build "Stay-There" Flesh and Clear Skin

Easy and Economical To Take—Results Quick

Of what use are fine features with an ugly, mottled skin, flabby flesh, sunken cheeks, pouches under the eyes, or a careworn, sickly-looking face? MASTIN'S Vitamon Tablets quickly help to clear your skin, put firm, healthy flesh on your bones, and increase your nerve force and power. Try them yourself and see.

Thin run-down folks should find this simple test well worth trying: First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Next take MASTIN'S Vitamon—two tablets with every meal. Then weigh and measure yourself again each week and continue taking MASTIN'S Vitamon regularly until you are satisfied with your gain in weight, "pep," energy and improved appearance. MASTIN'S Vitamon Tablets contain highly concentrated yeast-vitamines as well as the two other still more important vitamines (Fat Soluble A and Water Soluble C) combined with true organic iron and the necessary lime salts, all of which Science says your body must have to keep you strong, vigorous, well-formed and fortified against the germs of disease. By increasing the nourishing power of what you eat MASTIN'S Vitamon helps supply just what your body needs to feed the shrunken tissues, strengthen internal organs, clear the skin and renew shattered nerve force without upsetting the stomach or causing gas. Pimples, boils and skin eruptions seem to vanish as if by magic under its healthful, purifying influence. But it is not only a question of how much better you look and feel, or what your friends say and think—the scales and tape measure will tell their own story. A two weeks' test will surprise you.

MICHIGAN G. O. P. SENATE ENTRIES TWO-FISTED MEN

Lively Times Predicted as Election Nears.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—If the Republican primary to nominate a candidate for United States senator from Michigan does not become a more or less sanguinary political battle before the polls open on Sept. 12 it will not be for lack of two fisted fighting men in the ring. And dearly do the Wolverines love a fight, I am told.

There is fighting Charley Townsend, [illegible] years young and still flashing forth that spirit and vigor that made him the terror of the countryside some [illegible] years ago—Charley, as he is affectionately known to friend and foe, who is going to have a third term in the senate or know the reason why.

There is that redoubtable young warrior, Maj. Jack Emery, who performed deeds of high valor, helping to chase the Germans out of France and now offers the service of youth undismayed to chase old fogy notions out of the senate.

Then there is that nimble sparring expert, Congressman Pat Kelley, who, after ten years' service in the house, which never debates, thinks he is qualified to reform the senate, which debates too much.

Would Make Rich Work.

Finally there is a belligerent farmer, Herb Baker, who is "agin" about all that is and is calling on all who feel likewise to rise up and strike down the oppressor and pass a few laws to put the rich to work for a living.

Senator Townsend, having been out here on the stump a couple of weeks, went back to Washington today with blood in his eye after a couple of clashes with his opponents on the same platform at farmers' picnics. After attending to that little matter of getting tariff protection for Michigan beet sugar producers and sugar beet growers he is coming back to finish the primary campaign with the avowed intention of doing some plain talking, using the English language and making it crack like a new bull whip, as the late lamented Mr. Brann used to say.

By virtue of his twenty years of service in congress, his record of hard, painstaking work, his championship of progressive and constructive legislation, such as railroad regulation, national road building and the St. Lawrence seaway project, Townsend looms like a giant in this contest.

His Newberry Vote.

The only ground his oppents have found for attacking him is his defense of his colleague, Senator Newberry, from charges of election corruption, held unfounded by the courts and the senate, and his vote for the Cummins-Esch transportation act, which is condemned by radicals.

Twelve years ago Townsend announced for the senate against Senator Julius Caesar Burrows. They agreed to an informal primary and Townsend carried all but seven of the eighty-three counties. The legislature promptly ratified the primary result by electing Townsend to the senate. Six years ago he was opposed by W. H. Hill, a rich man, and carried all but two counties.

Maj. Emery Winning Supporters.

Forty-one years old, a stalwart, dashing 6 foot figure, radiating health and exuberance, Maj. Emery is winning a host of supporters in straightforward, manly stump speeches, discussing issues of the hour with the freshness of youth which refuses to be embarrassed by difficulties.

Emery was born in Grand Rapids, of English immigrant parents, and after a public school education became an accountant, later a real estate broker, and married a talented young woman from Traverse City. They have two children.

A passion for welfare work early led Emery into the Big Brotherhood movement, in which he has been a scoutmaster for years. He was 36 years old when the war with Germany came on. He closed his real estate office in Grand Rapids and entered the second officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan. He was a captain of infantry by the time he went to France, and shortly afterward he was promoted to the rank of major.

Kelley Knows Everybody.

Pat Kelley is reputed to have shaken hands at one time or another with every voter in Michigan and, some say, has kissed every baby. A big, hearty, genial man, with a florid complexion and an expansive smile is Kelley. When you find yourself drawn into that all embracing handclasp and bathed in the effulgence of that beaming urbanity you feel for a moment as if nobody before was ever quite so glad to see you. And first thing you know the congressman has called you by your first name and you think you must be pretty important to have your first name remembered by the great man since the last handshaking campaign.

Kelley, too, was a farm boy and later a school teacher, born near Dowagiac, Cass county, fifty-five years ago. His parents were driven from Ireland by the potato famine and settled in Indiana a few years before the civil war.

Pat was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1900—"rather late in life, but I couldn't manage it before that," he explains. He went to Detroit to practice law, but in 1904 got into politics, where he has been ever since. He was elected superintendent of public instruction and from 1907 to 1911 served as lieutenant governor.

If this primary were to be determined by familiarity with the Bible, State Senator Herbert Baker, a horny handed dirt farmer from Weadock, Cheboygan county, who quotes scripture by the yard, would be as good as elected senator right now. Great-grandfather Baker, captain of a New Bedford whaler and Grandfather Baker were Quakers, but the Quaker line ended with grandfather, who took up a homestead in Lenawee county in 1842, where twenty years later our candidate was born.

"I belong to the big church," said Baker, "but I was brought up on the Bible. Father was a hard shell Baptist."

Baker moved to Cheboygan county 32 years ago, taught school, sailed the lakes, worked in a sawmill and finally "took up land in the wild country" where he now has a farm of 320 acres. He took to the political warpath in 1906, fighting his way into the legislature, where he became speaker of the house in 1911. He was Bull Moose candidate for auditor general in 1912 and for congress in 1914. In 1918 he was elected to the state senate, where he became identified with the radical farmer-labor movement.

WAR 'ANGEL'

Mme. Ollie Silger Braun.

Serving in the civil and every American war since as a nurse, Mme. Ollie Silger Braun, 305 North Menard avenue, Austin, so stirred the emotions within soldier breasts that more than a thousand proposals of matrimony came her way.

Mme. Braun will don her civil war uniform next Wednesday and tell members of the "Borrowed Time" club, meeting at the First Presbyterian church, Oak Park, of her many experiences in the many campaigns.

A convenient little meeting place in Lobby of Hotel Brevoort

The ladies of your household especially will appreciate the charm of a dinner today

Brevoort Hotel

YOUR family's Sunday dinner here will have many pleasing features—and none more agreeable than the atmosphere of old-style hospitality, so noticeable in the Brevoort.

The beautiful Rainbow Room and the Old English Grill are famous for choiceness and variety of foods and for their model service.

Sunday dinner at the Brevoort has become the regular custom of great numbers of families resident in Chicago and towns nearby.

On week days the Brevoort Restaurants are the preferred meeting and eating places of business men who know the quality of Brevoort foods, the worth of good service, and the fairness of Brevoort charges.

Service a la carte throughout day and evening.

HARDING CONFERS WITH STRIKERS, "BIG 3" ENVOYS

May Call Rail Executives In Tomorrow.

ship on account of defective equipment and armed guards in shops and yards" is asked in a telegram sent to President Harding tonight by E. H. Fitzgerald, president of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Station and Express Employés.

Mr. Fitzgerald in making the telegram public through the Associated Press stated he had instructed J. J. Forrester, national legislative counsel of the brotherhood in Washington, to arrange a conference with the president Monday to lay before him all the details of the situation.

Both Sides Claim Victory.

New York, Aug. 5.—Both sides in the rail controversy today claimed to see impending victory in the conference of national officers of the engineers', trainmen's, enginemen's, and firemen's brotherhoods, and B. M. Jewell, head of the shop crafts, with federal executives at Washington.

The eastern strike committee interpreted the conference as proof that equipment of the railroads was becoming so unserviceable as to justify engineers, firemen, and trainmen in protesting that the lives of crews and passengers were being endangered by its continued use.

Neither side predicted what would be the result of the conference.

Senator Hits Executives.

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 5.—It is the duty of the railroad executives, acting for the carriers in the strike of railroad shopmen, to accept the settlement plan proposed by President Harding, Senator Hiram W. Johnson said today.

"We may take it that the present administration would do injustice to neither side and would present no plan which does not safeguard the rights of both," he said. "The present situation, therefore, is that a settlement is being blocked by the railroad companies."

Grandson Receives $5 for Cradle Purchased in 1876

Pana, Ill., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—In 1876 John S. Eller of Oconee, six miles south of Pana, purchased on credit of George Culp, Nokomis furniture dealer, a child's cradle for $5. Babes and children lulled to sleep in that cradle now have children of their own, but the cradle went unpaid for, due to financial misfortunes of Eller.

Today while in Nokomis, Eller attempted to locate Culp only to learn he had been dead many years. He learned that Culp's only heir was his grandson, Edward Schaper. Forthwith Eller hunted up Schaper and paid him the $5.

Exposed Food, Not Poison, Causes Shopmen's Illness

Jersey City, N. J., Aug. 5.—James Hagen, executive health officer of this city, today announced, after an investigation of the sudden illness of a score of nonunion shopcraft workers yesterday, that the probable cause was that the men ate ham and corn which had been left exposed in the sun too long after being taken from refrigerators. All suspicion that the workmen had been intentionally poisoned was removed by his inspection, he said.

Camp Grant Bullet Wings Soldier; Rifleman Sought

Rockford, Ill., Aug. 5.—Private Michael Dremus of Peoria, of Company E, 130th infantry, Illinois national guard, was accidentally shot in the arm today by a bullet from an army rifle. He was standing in the company street when he was shot. Officers are hunting for the soldier who fired the shot.

Bees Kill Team of Horses; Sting Driver Seriously

Denver, Colo., Aug. 5.—The team of horses which William Juliffe, a Berthoud, Colo., farmer, was driving to a load of hay was stung to death when a swarm of bees descended on them, according to a dispatch to the Denver News today. Juliffe also was attacked by the bees and he is in a serious condition, the dispatch said.

Famous Hikers REPORT
NO MORE BURNING FEET!
No More Pains from Corns, Callouses and Bunions, or Tired, Aching Feet Since Using Gypsy Foot Relief
A SECRET FROM THE DESERT
Which Makes the Pains and Aches Disappear as if by Magic!

New York:—Mrs. Dwyer and her son Harvey, the famous hikers who are walking from Boston, Mass., to Los Angeles, Calif., a distance of 3,200 miles, are now free from the foot-troubles that threatened to stop their intended record-making hike in this city a short time ago, when Mrs. Dwyer developed such a painful crop of corns, callouses, a bunion and tired, burning feet, that to continue seemed impossible. Reports now reaching here, however, show wonderful progress, even under most foot-trying conditions, since they treated their feet so successfully with GYPSY FOOT RELIEF—a secret from the desert—and continued on their way. Mrs. Dwyer's report says: "Just think; we have walked three days in the rain, our shoes soaked and wet, and we didn't have the least little sensation of burning feet."

Harvey says: "GYPSY FOOT RELIEF is wonderful. I don't think we would be able to go without it." Applied in a minute, pains from burning feet, callouses, corns and bunions disappear as if by magic. No need to worry over foot-misery, nor be afraid to take long hikes and attend dances, or fear staying on your feet as long as you like if you use GYPSY FOOT RELIEF. It is positively guaranteed to give successful results in every case or you get back the little it costs. GYPSY FOOT RELIEF, that saved the walking reputation of the Dwyers, and used by Violet MacMillan, the famous actress who won the "Cinderella Golden Slippers Prize" at the New York Exposition, and legions who formerly suffered from corns, burning feet, callouses, bunions and tired, aching, tender feet, is sold in this city by all good druggists, including:

Buck & Rayner,

Rotary Oil Burner

DEPENDABLE—100,000 in use.
SIMPLE—No electrical apparatus.
ECONOMICAL—Priced low; burns fuel oil.

No other oil burner is like Rotary. It is unique in principle. Does not require electrical power to operate it. And it needs no constant gas pilot light. Those two economies are sure with Rotary.

Rotary burns cheap, safe fuel oil—delivered by tank wagons nearly everywhere. Where fuel-oil is not available, distillate or kerosene may be used with entire satisfaction. Scores of owners will show you their figures, proving Rotary cheaper than burning coal.

Rotary is easily installed in any steam, hot-water or hot-air furnace. It is made in sizes small enough for the cottage or single store—large enough for an 18-apartment, factory or store building. We can show you installations of the type you are interested in.

Installation is quick and easy. Rotary is simpler to operate than a coal fire. There is nothing to get out of order—only one moving part. Dependable, economical, trouble-proof heat is yours if you install a Rotary. Remember, over 100,000 in use; established 1909; proved dependability.

No matter where you live, we can arrange for you to have a Rotary Oil Burner. Deferred payments if desired. Call, write or telephone for complete data. If you can possibly come to our offices and see a Rotary in operation, it will be more satisfactory. Open evenings by appointment.

Plumbing and Heating Contractors, Mechanical Engineers, Hardware Stores—all handle Rotary successfully.

ILLINOIS DAY HELPS TO SWELL PAGEANT CROWDS

Gov. Small Attends, but Waives Demonstration.

Program Today at Pageant of Progress

a. m. to 2 p. m.—Radio marathon speed contest in Congress hall.
:30 a. m.—Canoe regatta at north side of pier.
:30 p. m.—Review of exhibits. to 6 p. m.—Hydroplane and speed boat races at north side of pier.
to 3:30 p. m.—Concert by Starr Piano company in Congress hall.
:30 to 5 p. m.—Sacred concert by Homer Rodeheaver and party in Congress hall. to 7 p. m.—Twilight musicale, "Hearing Chicago First," Mrs. Max Obendorfer in Congress hall.
:30 to 8 p. m.—Organ recital by Hugh [illegible] in Congress hall.
to 10 p. m.—Operatic extravaganza, "Push Along," in Congress hall.
to 10 p. m.—Singing by German chorus west end of plaza.
10 p. m.—Fireworks.
10:15 p. m.—Competitive fire dive of feet by Harold Kruger and Jack Turner.

Celebration of Illinois day at the fair and the customary Saturday afternoon cessation of business activities combined yesterday to swell the crowd at the Pageant of Progress to larger proportions than Friday's slim attendance.

Gov. Small, who was to have given an address in Congress hall at noon, did not arrive until 1:30 and did not speak or attend a formal reception. After a salute of seventeen guns had been fired for him, he met naval officers in Mayor Thompson's box at the north side of the pier and later reviewed the exhibits in company of the mayor.

Officials of the pageant declared that the governor preferred that the demonstration planned in his honor not be held on account of the recent death of his wife.

One of the drawing cards was the second heat of the speed boat championship races, which was run off on the course north of the pier between 5 and 6 p. m. The Miss America, the Miss Chicago, Baby Sure Cure, and other fast boats gave an exhibition that furnished pageant goers many thrills.

Naval Vessels Arrive.

Arrival of the Tuscarora, the Wilmette, and many other boats from the Sixth naval district was one of the events of the afternoon. The river swim for girls, under auspices of the Chicago Daily Journal, started at 2 o'clock. At 4:30 there was a canoe regatta under the auspices of the American Canoe association north of the pier.

The congress on aeronautics, which opened Friday, was continued at sessions opening yesterday at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. in Congress hall.

Organizations from the Aryan Grotto played a prominent part in the schedule of events. The Aryan Grotto Zouaves, accompanied by the Aryan Grotto band, gave a parade and exhibition drill on the pier starting at 3 o'clock. At 7 o'clock the Aryan Groto band gave a concert, assisted by the Aryan Grotto quartet and ballet.

Radio Marathon Today.

Today's program at the pier is a full one. Of especial interest is the radio marathon, a speed contest for radio operators, which will take place in Congress hall between 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. under the direction of Lawrence R. Schmitt, United States radio instructor.

Homer Rodeheaver, widely known evangelistic singer and chorister, assisted by Miss Ruth Rodeheaver and the Woods Brothers' quartet, will give an hour and a half's program in Congress hall, starting at 3:30 p. m.

Mrs. Max Obendorfer will conduct a twilight musical on "Hearing Chicago First" in Congress hall between 5 and 7 p. m. From 8 to 10 p. m. the German chorus, under the direction of Karl Reckzeh and H. A. Rehberg, will give a concert at the west end of the plaza.

The day will be closed with a competitive fire dive between Harold Kruger and "You Tell 'Em" Turner, rivals for the job of official pageant diver. Both will dive from a height of 100 feet on the north side of the pier.

COOLIDGE SPENDS DAY IN CHICAGO ON HIS WAY WEST

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Vice President Calvin Coolidge spent several hours in Chicago yesterday en route to San Francisco, where he is scheduled to speak before the American Bar association. The vice president, who is accompanied by Mrs. Coolidge and his two sons, and by Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Stearns of Boston, was met by Brig. Gen. Charles G. Dawes and after assisting Mr. Dawes in the laying of the corner stone of the new Illinois Life Insurance building at 1212 Lake Shore drive, visited the Pageant of Progress. He said that the street car strike had had a noticeable effect on the patronage. Mr. Coolidge had little to say beyond the fact that general business conditions appeared to be improving and he hoped that the rail and coal strikes would be settled.

MAYOR'S PROXY TO SIGN NAME ON 9,522 CITY BONDS

Mayor Thompson got out of the onerous task of signing his name 9,522 times yesterday by naming a proxy to sign that number of bonds for him.

The amanuensis is Esdras M. Rousseau, a clerk in the municipal department of public service. Rousseau, who is handy at imitating the flowing signature of the mayor, will sign 2,595 Ogden avenue improvement bonds; 3,400 bridge bonds, 2,000 lighting bonds, and sundry other certificates and securities for the mayor.

BOYS' "CLEAN LIFE CLUBS" HOLD JOINT MEETING

Five Clean Life clubs of Hyde Park, composed of boys organized through the influence of Miss Lucy Page Gaston of the Anti-Cigaret league, held a community meeting last night for their friends in the Y. W. C. A. at 55th street and Kenwood avenue.

William A. McKeever, director of child welfare from the University of Kansas, was principal speaker. The boys entertained their guests with singing and served refreshments which they had bought with their own money.

"We expect to extend this Clean Life club idea to every school and church in Chicago and eventually to every school in the country to fight the cigaret habit and other bad habits among youths," said Miss Gaston last night.

COAST GUARD RECOVERS BODIES.

The bodies of Corwin Eckel, 4449 North Francisco avenue, and his brother Everett, drowned Friday night at the foot of Irving Park boulevard, were recovered yesterday by Capt. John O. Anderson and a crew from the U. S. Coast guard.

Traffic Policeman Sees His Own Flivver Stolen

Traffic Policeman W. C. Kelley went to work in his flivver Friday afternoon, and parked it on Quincy street. He then went to directing traffic on La Salle and Jackson. A few minutes later he recognized his flivver turning the corner directly in front of him, with a colored man at the wheel. He jumped on the running board and ordered the colored man to drive to the Central detail station, where it was learned that his name was James Bell, 3656 Giles avenue.

Soldiers Sell Needles Made in Germany; Anger Legion

Peddling of packets of needles marked, "Made in Germany," by men in army uniform has aroused the ire of Homer Dahringer post of the American Legion in Waukegan. Mancel Talcott, commander of the post, asked the police that the men in the future be made to produce their discharge papers and not be allowed to sell their wares in the overseas uniform.

GIRL IN MILLION NO DIFFERENT IN FEET, HE ASSERTS

She may be a girl in a million, but, 10 to 1, she has feet just like 999 other girls, according to Dr. Clifford S. Grigg, president of the Illinois School of Chiropody, who declares that there is not one perfect foot in a thousand.

"But when the next generation grows up the perfect foot will be the rule and not the exception," Dr. Grigg said yesterday as he outlined the program for the eleventh annual convention of the National Association of Chiropodists, which tomorrow will begin a five day session at the Drake hotel.

"Women now consider the chiropodist as important as the beauty specialist, and men regard him as necessary as the dentist," he added.

SEE SOLUTION OF ROBBERIES.

The arrest yesterday of Harry Rosen, 3341 Federal street, following information given by Louis Bernstein, captured Friday night after robbing a Newark Shoe company store, will clear up a score of similar robberies made last month, police believe.

Nab 3 Jitney Drivers as Robbery Suspects

Lieut. William O'Connor and a squad from the detective bureau captured three men in a jitney marked "Sixty-third street to loop—25 cents," suspected of robbing Thomas Martin, a grocer at 559 West 39th street, of $15. The men gave the names of Sam Shapiro, 4309 South Halsted street; Charles Foley, 5741 Drexel avenue; and John Walsh, 5700 Bishop street. After the robbery the bandits are said to have started away soliciting passengers.

Hope Evangelical Up from Store to $100,000 Church

Four services will be held at the Hope Evangelical church, 64th street and Washtenaw avenue, today in observance of the dedication of the new church structure.

The church was started five years ago by the Rev. John Leimers, the present pastor, in a store building. Its growth has enabled it to erect the new $100,000 structure.

SIBERIA'S FATE TO BE DEBATED IN PEKING SOON

Japan Has Plans to Keep Control of Harbin.

BY CHARLES DAILEY.
[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]
[Copyright: 1922: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PEKING, Aug. 5.—The soviet envoy, M. Joffe, is en route to Peking to attempt direct negotiations with Japan regarding the Siberian questions. China also will participate because of the numerous inter-related problems. M. Joffe left Moscow July 31 and is expected at Chita Aug. 12, probably arriving here in the latter part of the month.

Negotiations were begun through the Japanese legation in Warsaw. Reports to Peking indicate that Japan seeks a trade treaty similar to that Germany announced, arousing the old bugaboo of the tripartite alliance and menacing the world's peace, but possibly it may be dictated solely by trade advantages.

Personnel of Conference.

Japan's accepting M. Joffe as an envoy is regarded as significant. Foreign Minister Janson will represent the Chita government, while Minister Obata is expected to represent Japan. China's delegate depends on the reörganization of the cabinet.

Japan, it is believed is willing to forego the Nikolaievsk compensation, retaining Saghalin, but it demands the rights of navigation on the Sungari river equally with Amur, thus completing the domination of Harbin. Here China demands consideration also. The guarantees of the Chinese Eastern railway will not be sacrificed, since the interallied technical board dissolves with the evacuation of Japanese troops.

Red Control in Mongolia.

China's participation also is certain to precipitate the question of soviet control in Mongolia, wherein the communists recently seized private property, also exporting heavy levies on foreign trade.

Owing to the great American interests involved, the conference will be closely watched.

I. C. Foreman Is Hurled Before Train and Killed

Robert McCullough, 5518 Emerald avenue, foreman of the fruit platform of the Illinois Central freight yards, was killed yesterday when struck by a freight car.

MAN AND WOMAN HELD ON STORY TOLD BY GIRL

ANNA SHELLO.

Mrs. Anna Shello, 1042 Blue Island avenue, and James Fatigati of New Philadelphia, O., are under arrest in connection with a story told by Anna Shello, 15 years old, sister-in-law of the former, to Judge Adams in the Court of Domestic Relations yesterday. Fatigati is charged with a serious offense and Mrs. Shello with contributing to the delinquency of the girl.

According to Anna, she went to the home of her sister-in-law at the latter's bidding on Nov. 12, 1921. There she met Fatigati. She was given a glass of wine, and several days later woke up in the farm home of Fatigati in Ohio. The man told her she was married to him; but when she begged him to do so, he took her back to Chicago. He deserted her in the Grand Trunk station upon their arrival here.

"LE CHEMINEAU" SUNG AT RAVINIA; DANISE SCORES

Cast Appears in Leroux's Opera for First Time.

BY EDWARD MOORE.

Ravinia's internationals ventured with high success last night into the season's second important addition to the repertoire, effecting a production of the Louis Xavier Leroux's "Le Chemineau," perhaps the most interesting and appealing opera to come out of France in the last fifteen years, or since the importation of Charpentier's "Louise."

ALICE GENTLE.
[De Gueldre Photo.]

A fascinating work, "Le Chemineau," perhaps has not quite arrived at its own in full popular esteem, but none the less a distinct achievement. It is the shrewd union of a poet's play with a score which bows to the Wagner theory in every bar and at the same time attains compactness, clarity, appositeness, and the quality called elegance.

High Interest in New Cast.

For those of last night's audience who had heard "Le Chemineau" in one or all of its several Auditorium performances, the principal aspect of interest was the Ravinia cast; for not one of the nine singing-actors involved had taken part in earlier Chicago representations, and, so far as the records show, none of them, save Danise, had been associated with the opera in European performances. So for the eight others and the audience alike the evening was one of "creations," by which is meant that adjustments to the rôles were effected without copying predecessors. As a matter of record, the cast is appended:

Toinette	Alice Gentle
Wanderer [Le Chemineau]	Giuseppe Danise
Toinet	Giordano Paltrinieri
Francois	Leon Rothier
Maitre Pierre	Louis d'Angelo
Aline	Anne Roselle
Catherine	Philine Falco
Thomas	Pompilio Malatesta
Martin	Graham Marr

Hasselmans, Guide and Friend

These singing nine, with the opera-wise fifty of the Chicago Symphony orchestra, had acquired their clear knowledge of all that "Le Chemineau" required in what may be called a direct message from Leroux himself, sent through Louis Hasselmans. Just as this conductor took on and lovingly discharged all responsibility for the Chicago première of the opera in 1919, so did he take like labors and deliver like results in last night's happy experiment.

Danise took the title rôle with results that made of him a far bigger, because more imaginative, artist than had been suspected from his correct and conventional demonstrations in the Verdi and Donizetti rôles for baritone. Needless to say, the music offered no difficulties to his clear, warm voice. Matching up with him in sympathetic charm and artistic achievement was Alice Gentle in the fine rôle of Toinette, an expected but welcome success.

Rothier had a part easily within his wide range as an actor in the forlorn, self-sacrificing Francois; Paltrinieri appeared with a persuasive study of the discouraged fils naturel, Toinet; the rich farmer of D'Angelo was all that it should have been; and there were adequate and helpful patches of color in the good mosaic by Miss Roselle, Miss Falco, and the Messrs. Malatesta and Marr. All in all, an evening to be underlined.

BO-PEEP OF IDAHO IS KIDDED IN VERSE BY NEBRASKA SENATOR

Washington, D.C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—An attack on the wool schedule of the tariff bill was made from a new angle today, when Senator Hitchcock [Neb.], Democrat, delved into doggerel verse at the expense of Senator Gooding [Idaho], Republican, reading his product to the senate.

"There was some reference yesterday by the senator from Idaho to his ownership of sheep," said Senator Hitchcock, "and it suggested to me a few verses, which I shall take the liberty of reading, as follows:

Gooding had eight thousand sheep,
  Their fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Gooding went
  The sheep were sure to go.

They followed him by night and day;
  It was against the rule;
They filled the statesman with dismay,
  Tossed high the wool schedule.

And when the people found it out
  Their rage began a-waxing;
They knew the presence of those sheep
  Meant heavy tariff taxing.

But if the wool on Gooding's sheep
  Made cloth for those who wear it;
Won't grow unless we tax our folks,
  Then they must grin and bear it.

But Gooding's case is only one
  Of many like abuses,
Of taxes that the tariff lays
  For private and not public uses.

Both Mr. Gooding and Mr. Hitchcock will recover.

JAIL PHYSICIAN IN DANGER OF DEATH AFTER OPERATION

Dr. Francis J. McNamara, chief physician of the county jail, is in a critical condition at the Michael Reese hospital as the result of an operation for appendicitis performed last Tuesday. A general peritonitis has set in.

Though taken ill last Sunday, Dr. McNamara did not seek treatment until two days later, when he walked into the hospital. Dr. Emmanuel Friend, an associate, was summoned and operated almost immediately.

Dr. McNamara gained wide fame by his recent and unusual battle to keep alive Harvey Church, who was condemned to hang for the murder of two automobile salesmen. Dr. McNamara defeated Church's hunger strike.

HARRISON MAKES CHARGE AGAINST SMOOT IN SENATE

Alleges Plan to Reduce Cuban Production.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—With a unanimous consent to vote on the subject not later than 2 o'clock Tuesday, the senate today plunged into consideration of the sugar duty. Senator Harrison [Miss.], Democrat, made a heated attack, in which he charged that Senator Smoot [Utah], Republican, had attempted to induce Cuban planters to restrict their crop with a promise of a lower duty if this were done. Senator Smoot denied this charge, but said he had written a letter which he proposes to make public in a speech Monday.

The Mississippi senator also called attention to a charge that certain interests concerned with the importation of sugar from Cuba had formed the United States and Cuban Sugar Producers' Agreement, Inc., of which syndicate one Alfred Grover was a director, the object being to accumulate a fund of $14,000,000 on the basis of one-fourth of a cent a pound of Cuban sugar imported by members of the syndicate, this fund to be paid really by Cuban producers in return for a lower duty and to be distributed among beet and cane sugar producers of the United States in some manner.

Investigation Is Urged.

Shortly before the recess today Senator Harrison introduced a resolution asking the appointment of a special committee of five to investigate these charges. No direct reference to Senator Smoot was made in the resolution, which refers to an "official of the United States government" and to the alleged syndicate.

Senator Broussard [La.], Democrat, not only answered Senator Harrison's assault against the sugar duty, but asserted that the rate proposed by the house ways and means committee and left unchanged by the senate finance committee, 1 1-16 cents a pound on the basis of Cuban raw sugar, was not sufficient protection for the American producers and proposed an amendment to increase this rate to 2 cents a pound.

Debate to Be Limited.

Although sugar was taken up immediately after the senate met today, it was by a special unanimous consent agreement. Later in the afternoon, Senator McCumber [N. D.], chairman of the finance committee, introduced an agreement reached in conference with Senator Simmons, ranking minority member of the finance committee, Senator Lenroot, and others, which imposes drastic limitation of debate upon the remainder of the tariff discussion. This was adopted without comment.

No final date for a vote on the bill is provided in the agreement, but its terms will bring the end probably within two weeks, leaders said privately.

THIEF GETS SAD SHOCK WHEN HE FINDS YEN IN LOOT

Problem of conduct:

If you were a burglar and thought you had stolen a lapful of real cash and later found most of it was English pound notes and Japanese yen, what would you do?

The police blotter at the detective bureau reveals that somewhere in Chicago there is a sadly disillusioned Raffles, who is cautiously seeking rates of foreign exchange and wondering how he can open negotiations with some obliging money changer without landing in the house-gow.

The room of Dr. S. Kirokuro Eudo, a Japanese, at the Drexel Arms hotel, was rifled Thursday, and £10 of English money, value $50; 1,000 German marks, value almost zero; 4,000 Japanese yen, value $2,000, and $145 in United States currency were stolen.

2 Men Sentenced for Teaching Boy, 14, to Drink

Charged with teaching a 14 year old boy, to drink moonshine and to gamble, Sam Pisaki, 3152 Mospratt street, was fined $25, and Felix Taplonoski, 3288 Wall street, sentenced to thirty days in the house of correction by Judge Thomas J. Peden in the Boys' court yesterday. The judge promised to deal severely with Adam Peratski, a third "instructor," 3206 Wall street, when his case comes up Sept. 2.

LEONARD WINS TAME GO FROM HAMMER

MISS AMERICA WINS HYDRO TITLE

MISS CHICAGO NOSED OUT BY DETROIT CRAFT

Baby Sure Cure Sinks; Crew Rescued.

GAR WOOD.

Miss America, Gar Wood's famous racer, won the Great Lakes speedboat championship in a day of sensational racing in connection with the Pageant of Progress yesterday. Maintaining an average speed of fifty-nine miles an hour over the the twenty mile course off the Municipal pier, the Detroit boat led Miss Chicago, Commodore Sheldon Clark's Chicago champion, by scant seconds after one of the most thrilling races of the regatta.

The second day of the speedboat races came near resulting in a tragedy for in a race against time, Baby Sure Cure of Detroit, driven by C. W. Crawley, while hitting a pace close to sixty miles an hour, struck a rough spot of water north of the pier.

While the largest crowd of the pageant screamed and shuddered, the famous speedboat dived, leaped and dived again, and buried the half stunned driver.

Life Saved with Pulmotor.

A quick rescue followed, but for a time it was feared that Crowley would not recover from the shock and the long submersion. After five minutes' fast work with a pulmotor he was revived, and was able to watch the remainder of the sport.

H. J. Winn, the mechanic, also of Detroit, was thrown into the water. In the plunge his face was struck against the side of the boat and the propeller gashed his face. His injuries were not serious.

Preparations were made at once to raise the boat and an attempt will be made to put her in shape to race in the final races today. Baby Sure Cure is owned by Paul Strassburg of Detroit and is considered one of the fastest boats in the world, having beaten Miss Chicago, last year's winner of the free for all single engine class.

Fractures World Speed Mark.

Miss America developed the greatest speed of her racing career in capturing the Sinclair trophy. She raced the last lap at a speed of 69.22 miles an hour and broke the world's record for a two and a half mile circular course.

Miss Chicago gave the Wood entry a hard fight to the last lap, holding her neck and neck to the final lap, when the Detroit speed marvel ran away from her.

Miss Chicago won the final race of the day in one of the hardest fought contests of all. Over the fifteen mile course she led W. D. Foreman's Fore and Kinley Bailey's Peoria entry, Badger Girl, handily, drawing away at the end, and her time for the fifteen miles was 41:36.

Class Record to Miss Illinois.

Miss Illinois II. smashed the records for the 215 class in a spirited contest over the five mile course. P. D. Q. Sixth was second and Margaret III., third. Van Dyke III. finally showed the class of the Ohio river speed demons by winning the five mile race for the 320 class.

The big crowd was cheering for Miss Ethel Hanley of Muscatine, Ia., who piloted Ethel Tenth, but the best the woman driver could do was to fight it out to the finish, coming second by the margin of a second. P. D. Q. III. was third.

The third and final contests in these races will be held this afternoon, starting at 2 o'clock. The last three days of next week the displacement craft will be given a series of contests and some of the fastest runabouts in the world are already here for these events.

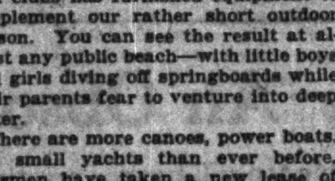
IN the WAKE of the NEWS

GROWTH OF WATER SPORTS.

CHICAGOANS have only within the last few years really realized that the lake and its beach in their very front yard is a great amusement place. In The Wake's opinion, this realization by the population as a whole is only in its infancy.

If supporting argument is needed, we cite the 75,000 attendance at THE TRIBUNE water carnival held recently in Lincoln park. It was a most attractive program, to be sure, but so many people would not attend any event without the appeal of interest.

Swimming, canoeing, rowing, and yachting rank among our most healthful sports. Our grandfathers, coming from the country, had acquired their strokes in the "old swimmin' hole."



Then came a generation of city breds, many of whom never learned swimming in their childhood days. Now we see again a happy recognition that every child should know how to swim.

Establishment of pools in municipal parks and playgrounds, settlement houses, Y. M. C. A.'s, public schools, and clubs has furnished equipment to supplement our rather short outdoor season. You can see the result at almost any public beach—with little boys and girls diving off springboards while their parents fear to venture into deep water.

There are more canoes, power boats, and small yachts than ever before. Oarsmen have taken a new lease of life. Even the time honored Mackinac race reached its old glories. (See Fullerton's log.) The Chicago Yacht club has approved plans for a handsome new home, upon which work will begin soon. All this activity will be stimulated as the City Beautiful plans mature and give us more protected harbor space.

Nor is the growth of aquatic sport confined to Chicago. All over the country we find new records being established, while an American, Hoover of Duluth, invaded England, and for the first time in years brought home the Diamond Sculls trophy.

Water sports are beneficial to the participants, thrilling and interesting for the spectators.

There's Many a Slip, Etc.

A foozled approach is provoking,
I abhor a slice in the rough;
To miss a subject for joking,
To see it's unspeakably tough.
An unfailing source of acquiring
A grouch with each foursome is seen,
But I hold there is nothing so tiring
As to miss a short putt on the green.

Sometimes when my drive is erratic,
The trusty old mashie comes through,
'Tis then I'm a joyous fanatic
As I skim o'er the bunker in two.
Sweet visions take form of a birdie,
A scant eighteen inches between;
Then —! —! —!
I miss a short putt on the green.

OFFICIAL GOLF GRAFT?

A Helper who golfs the Jackson park course and purchases his supply of used pills from two small boys remonstrated last week at the falling quality of the balls offered for sale. Whereupon one urchin explained:

"Well, most balls are lost at the water hazards on the eighth and eleventh holes. So after it's dark the copper lets us take off our clothes and go in. We walk around in the water, feeling the balls with our feet. We used to pay him one good ball each for letting us go in. Other kids offered him more, and now we have to let him take all the best balls or he'll throw us out of the park. I dunno whether he plays himself or sells 'em."

The batting star set up a squawk,
But stopped soon after he'd begun,
And took a lonesome little walk—
The Umpire won.

The pitcher, paid in royal style,
Bespoke his wrath at what was done,
And pitched no more for quite a while—
The Umpire won.

Ball players, take this tip from me,
Before you start your useless din:
The fans don't givadam to see
The Umpire win.

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Lulled into a state of helplessness by the southpawing of Ray Francis, the White Sox took it on the run again yesterday, dropping the fourth in a row to Washington Senators, 6 to 2. A total of six bingles, three of them in the ninth, was all Gleason's workers could muster off the Seattle, Wash., rookie in nine rounds of endeavor.

While Francis was knocking the south siders dead, and incidentally he was the third southpaw to accomplish the trick in as many successive games, the Senators perpetrated distressing things upon Urban Faber, the ace of the pale hose staff. The big sorrel top not only hurled below his customary gait, but was guilty of other loose work that made scoring a comparatively simple matter for Milan's jinx gang.

Wild Heaves Aid Visitors.

Faber started slipping in the sixth after hurling five good innings that kept the two teams breast and breast. His unlooked for contribution in the sixth was a wild pitch that broke the series of goose eggs. He followed with an erratic heave over first in the seventh, and this little mishap along with an error by Sheely and three hits let five Senators trickle over the pan and settle the pastime.

The defense of Washington was in exact contrast to that of the Sox. Although there was nothing wrong with Francis' hurling he might have had a little more trouble if things hadn't gone smoothly behind him. This was particularly true of the fifth, when Shanks made two snappy one handed stabs of hard bounder that were labeled hits. Sheely sandwiched a double between the two plays, so if Shanks hadn't pulled his circus stunt the south siders might have accomplished something.

More Loose Play.

Faber's wild pitch in the sixth came with Harris on third after two singles. Then Peck opened the seventh with a single and was safe at second when Sheely threw wild to Johnson on Picinich's tap. Francis bunted and Faber heaved the ball into right field, Peck scoring. Rice hit a single over short and Picinich tallied. Next came Harris with a triple to right, Francis and Rice counting. Harris tallied the last run on an infield out.

Chicago's useless rally in the ninth was started on a single by Mulligan. Collins also hit safely and Mulligan scored on a double by Hooper. Mostil was easy and Falk tore off a fly that let Collins home. Sheely popped out to end it.

The Inquiring Reporter

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question.

The Tribune will pay $5 cash for questions which are accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send in your name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter, Chicago Tribune." No questions will be returned. For today's question Wm. F. Shirley, Marshalltown, Ia., was awarded $5.

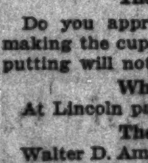
The Question.

Do you approve the suggestion of making the cups larger in golf, so that putting will not be so difficult?

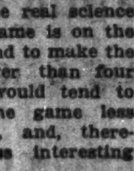
Where Asked.

At Lincoln park golf course.

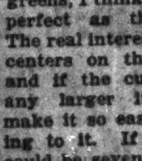
The Answers.



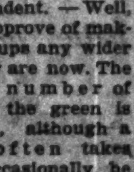
Walter D. Amadeo, 3422 Elaine place, attorney. — Absolutely not. The real science of the game is on the green, and to make the cup larger than four inches would tend to make the game less scientific, and, therefore, less interesting and less popular.



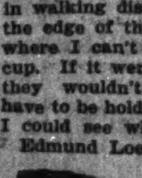
Mrs. Zerlida Zuber, 3430 Elaine place. —The cups are four inches wide now, and, in comparison with the greens, I think they are perfect as they are. The real interest in golf centers on the green, and if the cups were any larger it would make it so easy there would be nothing to it. If they were larger you could be seven or eight feet from the cup and still be pretty sure of scoring.



Earl Devany, 6522 Minerva avenue, correspondent. — Well, I don't approve of making the cups any wider than they are now. The average number of putts to the green is two, and, although a person often takes three, occasionally he will only take one.



Miss Mary E. Ames, 219 Wendell street, home girl.—I wish they were larger, because the ball usually lands somewhere within walking distance of the edge of the green, where I can't see the cup. If it were larger they wouldn't always have to be holding the pennant so that I could see where to aim.



Edmund Loew, 615 Belden avenue, salesman.—I think the more hazardous you make the game the better you enjoy it. If they do anything with that cup, I'd rather they'd make it smaller. If any change is made it should be made smaller, so as to equalize the chances between the long driving and the short driving, and the good putter and the poor putter.

Hennessey, Wesbrook, Net Rivals Today

FINAL MATCHES TODAY.

With the last of the home contingent in the men's divisions eliminated as a result of yesterday's matches, a pair of state champions, Walter Wesbrook, Detroit, and John Hennessey, Indianapolis, will play for the western singles title this afternoon at the South Side Tennis club.

By an unusual coincidence the Hoosier and Wolverine prides will oppose Ralph Burdick and Fritz Bastian, Indianapolis, national clay court holders, in the finals for the doubles honors and the trip to Boston. Both teams won their semi-final skirmishes yesterday.

Miss Leighton Wins Easily.

Miss Marion Leighton added the western singles title to her imposing collection by beating Miss Jessie Grieve, Los Angeles, in easy fashion, 6—1, 6—1. Mrs. H. S. Adams, Indianapolis, retained her share in the doubles championship with the aid of Miss Katherine Waldo, the pair disposing of Mrs. Ruth Reise, Saginaw, Michigan title holder, and Mrs. E. C. Johnson, Detroit, 6—2, 6—2, in a contest that never was in doubt.

In the singles semi-finals Walter T. Hayes, the old master, with a ranking of fourteenth in the national list, was the first to crack, then crumble under the battering attack of John Hennessey, losing, 7—5, 6—2, 6—4, in three savagely fought sets.

Veteran Thrown Off Balance.

Hennessey depended almost entirely on a speedy backhand stroke to the far corners that threw the veteran off balance and caused him to frequently overdrive or net. On a fair return the Indianapolis player would be set for a slashing forehand drive. Early in the second set the gallery of 1,000, long accustomed to a succession of victories for Hayes, sensed the fact that Old Man Time was taking his toll.

A. L. Green Jr., former city champion, followed Hayes to the discard by succumbing to the untiring Wesbrook, 6—4, 6—4, 4—6, 6—1. The doughty little Wolverine, who slings his racket from the port side, covered a world of ground in the early stages, coming to the net rarely, and then only to kill soft returns from Green out of position. The Wolverine later crowded his opponent at all times when Green let up.

Losers Fight Vainly.

Burdick and Bastian during the process of eliminating the Ohio delegation of Kirk Reid and Willis Fulton, 7—5, 4—6, 2—6, 6—3, 6—3, were forced to display everything in their repertoire, the losers fighting grimly to stem a torrent of dazzling strokes. Burdick, with the reputation of being one of the finest overhead players in the country, demonstrated his claims to an appreciative audience.

The match was replete with brilliant exchanges of hard volleying at the net. Fulton ran Burdick a close second for laurels.

With Squair handicapped to some extent by a crippled ankle, the combination of Squair and Hayes found the youngsters, Wesbrook and Hennessey, too hot to handle, bowing, 5—7, 6—4, 6—0, 6—4.

The most direct automobile route to the South Side club from the loop is Michigan avenue to 55th street, through Washington park, striking the Midway and turning south on Stony Island avenue to 73d. Two blocks east is the club. The Illinois Central affords the best means of steam travel, express trains stopping at Parkside station, three blocks from the club.

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 5.—Daniel (Hy) Fowlkes, Memphis pitcher, has been sold to Boston Americans for a reported $10,000 price.

PETERSBURG HAS A NICE, QUIET RACE; 4 CRASHES; 5 HURT

PETERSBURG, Ind., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—What the auto races here today lacked in speed thrills they made up in hair raising escapes from death and a series of accidents in which five persons were injured.

In the early part of the race two cars crashed and the drivers, Earl Warrick of Covington and Clyde Sneden, were injured. Robert Elkins, candidate for county commissioner, rushed to rescue the drivers and suffered a broken leg when a third car crashed into the first two. A few minutes later a Brown Special threw a wheel. It struck Dr. Austin Logan, injuring him internally.

While this wreck was being taken off the track a Chevrolet, driven by Carl Knowles of Vincennes, jumped through a wire fence and Knowles suffered a broken leg and severe cuts. Another Chevrolet racer won the race, which was for fifteen miles.

TACTICS OF BOXERS FAIL TO MAKE HIT WITH FANS AT MICHIGAN CITY

Champion Wary of Foe's Advertised Punch.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Michigan City, Ind., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Bennie Leonard, lightweight champion and one of the greatest holders of the title in the history of pugilism, gave Ever Hammer, the bristling blonde tiger of Chicago a boxing lesson for ten rounds in the main event of the show conducted by Floyd Fitzsimmons in his new arena here this evening.

It might be unjust to say that Leonard did not try but this is the way it appeared to many of the fans around the ring. The champion was careful and considerate of his opponent and when it did appear he had the Swede in a bad way, he either backed away or allowed Hammer to come in close and hang on.

Only Little Damage Done.

Whether it was a carry, we will leave for those who saw the contest to determine. It did appear that Leonard did not try on occasions. The Chicago boxer mussed up the champion's bad right eye in the third round and knocked the patch off it in the sixth session. When Leonard saw the plaster strike the floor, he tore in and administered some punishment for a moment or two.

Not once during the entire mill did Hammer land a blow which had any effect on the champion. Even his short, choppy punches at close quarters failed to anger the title holder. In the first two rounds Ever made the mistake of trying to box the champion. These were tame affairs and the crowd immediately indicated it sensed something wrong.

Take Their Time Boxing.

At times the boxers, spurred on by shouts from the crowd, mixed matters. At other stages they simply moved about in sluggish fashion and took their time about breaking. In fact, it got so bad in the last two rounds that Referee Davie Miller had to go between them continually to get them apart.

The fact is admitted that Hammer was stung a few times and it was wise judgment to hang on, but he did it so many times without provocation that he made the bout look bad. Leonard, the fox that he is, tried to make the argument look interesting but Hammer failed to go through with his part. The Chicagoan fought as best he could but he was absolutely no match for the champion, who had nothing more than a workout.

Leonard Fought Against Will.

In fact it became known today that Leonard did not want to take the match and the only reason he came west was to give his mother and sister a little outing. With the exception of a little blood on Leonard's right eye no damage was inflicted by either fighter. Hammer left the ring with his countenance bearing a crimson color.

The Chicagoan caught plenty and pitched but little. He was wild with his left swings, which either fell short or landed on Bennie's shoulders or arms. The champion, however, blocked most of Ever's punches before they were well under way. At other times he threw the Swede off when he attempted to run into clinches or mix at close quarters.

Leonard had a wide margin in every round. Although Hammer tried to get back some of the play by forcing the fight, he was met with straight lefts, followed by right crosses. The Swede did his best fighting at close quarters when he jolted the champion with light left and right uppercuts.

Shout for Knockout Ignored.

In the seventh round, Bennie backed Hammer against the ropes, held him there at arm's length, and then pasted him with his right to the head and body. In the eighth session Bennie started to get to Hammer by use of left and right uppercuts. The crowd shouted for a knockout, but the title holder broke away and permitted Hammer to steady down and get his bearings. The champion resorted to the same tactics in the ninth and tenth rounds.

It became known after the fight that Leonard suffered some pain from a front tooth which was loosened in the Tendler fight. All through the fight the champion boxed with a rubber case around his teeth, and at the close of the last round one of his front teeth was nearly out. If this was the case the fans claim he should have fought harder and tried to put his opponent away instead of letting the contest go the limit.

How Preliminaries Went.

In the semi-windup, Harold Smith, stockyards bantamweight, stopped Eddie Connors of Grand Rapids in the fourth round. Smith had all the better of the milling in the first three sessions. In the fourth round, Harold had his opponent in a bad way. Connors motioned to his seconds to toss in the towel, but Referee Davy Miller stopped the fracas at the proper time.

Connors was substituted for Irish Jimmy Clayton of Pittsburgh. The Smoky City battler came in three pounds overweight, and Manager Buck Montgomery refused to let Smith go on with him.

In the opening contest, Jack Ellis and Charley Glaser, both of Chicago, went six rounds to a draw. Ellis received a bruised right eye and Glaser bled from the nose. Their weight was announced at 124 pounds.

Sammy Frager Makes Good.

Sammy Frager of Chicago stopped Irish Jimmy Clayton of Pittsburgh in the second preliminary of six rounds in the fourth session. Sammy put his man down for the eight count in the fourth and, after he went down again, Referee Miller stopped the uneven contest. Frager took the bout on short notice and made good.

It was an ideal day for a boxing show. The day broke clear and bright and the fans started to arrive early. They came by auto, rail, boat and electric. Al Bloom brought over 800 on his special train, while as many Chicagoans came by boat. The crowd was handled in orderly fashion, although it was not up to expectations.

Emil Thiry was master of ceremonies and had the boys in the ring promptly and without delays. The last bout was over just as dusk was beginning to fall over the sky blue arena.

Fight By Rounds

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Here is an account by rounds of the Bennie Leonard-Ever Hammer bout for the lightweight championship:

FIRST ROUND—Hammer put a light left to the stomach and caught a light left to the nose as they went into a clinch. Leonard put a solid left to the body and danced away from a right swing. They boxed carefully, each being content to feel the other out. Hammer blocked a left for the body and they fell into a clinch. Ever hit low and was cautioned by the referee. Leonard hooked a left to the stomach and blocked a left for the head. Leonard missed with a left swing for the head, but connected with two lefts to the face as they clinched at the bell. Leonard had a shade.

SECOND ROUND—Hammer appeared timid and missed with his leads. Leonard stepped around him and then planted a solid right on the jaw. Leonard drove a left to the face and crossed a right to the head. Ever hooked a right over the champion's guard, but caught a solid right in return. Leonard put a right to the head, but Hammer could not get through Bennie's perfect defense. Bennie stuck a left to the face and crossed his right to the jaw, knocking Hammer back. Leonard put three lefts to the face without a return at the bell. Leonard's round.

THIRD ROUND—Ever stuck a light left to the body, but the champion jabbed the Swede three times without a return. Hammer swung a left on Bennie's right eye and the champion put his glove up to see if it was bleeding. The champion got mad and drove rights to Hammer's face. They went in close and Ever reached the bad eye with short left jolts. Hammer tore in and continually swung for the champion's bad right eye. They went in close and jolted each other at the bell. Leonard had a shade.

FOURTH ROUND—Hammer started to fight the champion instead of boxing and the bout became more interesting. The Swede got in close and drove choppy rights to the body. Leonard caught Ever with a solid right to the jaw and followed with a left to the stomach. The champion put a solid right to the jaw and Hammer ran into a clinch. They traded body punches at close quarters. Leonard put a straight left to the face at the bell. Leonard had a shade.

FIFTH ROUND—The champion put lefts to the face and Hammer was short with a left swing. Leonard swung to the head and followed with a right to the jaw. Leonard started to carry the fight to Hammer and forced him to the ropes. Hammer put a light left to the body and brought another to the champion's jaw at the bell. Leonard's round.

SIXTH ROUND—Leonard's right swing landed on Hammer's shoulder. Another right found a resting place on the Swede's jaw. Ever missed a wild left swing and went into a clinch. Bennie drove lefts to Hammer's face in piston like fashion and backed away from Ever's left swings. A short jolt by Hammer knocked the patch off Leonard's right eye. The champion then forced Hammer to the ropes and nailed him with a right cross on the jaw as the crowd hollered for a knockout. They went into close quarters and landed light punches as the bell sounded. Leonard's round.

SEVENTH ROUND—Leonard put a straight left to the face and Hammer ran into a clinch. The Swede was unable to reach the champion with anything he pitched. Leonard simply stood back and jabbed and hooked his opponent at will. Hammer started to cover up and the champion danced around him and peppered him with left jabs and hooks. Leonard applied the one, two punch and the Swede went into close quarters to avoid punishment. Leonard pushed Hammer up against the ropes, held him at arm's lengths and then belted him with a right to the body at the bell. Leonard's round.

EIGHTH ROUND—The champion put two straight lefts to the face and Hammer tore into a clinch. The champion shook him off and nailed him with a solid right on the jaw. Hammer went in close, put a light left to the stomach, but caught a solid right uppercut on the chin. Hammer held on, but Leonard shook him off and pasted him at will. Leonard ripped in a right uppercut and knocked Hammer's head back with a straight left. Another right uppercut and Ever ran in close. Bennie missed a right swing and caught a light left on the body at the bell. Leonard's round.

NINTH ROUND—The champion stuck a straight left into Hammer's face and backed away from a left swing. Bennie planted a solid right to Ever's jaw and the Swede went into a clinch. Ever landed a light left uppercut on the jaw but was stabbed twice with left hand. They went in close and Hammer jolted the champion with short right uppercuts. Hammer started to hold on and the referee had to warn them to break. Ever connected with a right swing but caught right and lefts to the head. Bennie stuck a left in the Swede's face at the bell. Leonard's round.

TENTH ROUND—They shook hands. Leonard put two lefts to the face and Hammer went into a clinch. They traded short body punches and then Leonard landed on the Swede with a right to the jaw. Ever again went into a clinch. Leonard drove lefts and rights to the head, but Hammer kept going in close and the referee had to go between them. The crowd started to hiss Hammer for holding. The champion stuck his right in Hammer's face twice and then hooked his opponent with his right. They went in close and on the break Leonard pasted the Swede with right uppercuts as the bell sounded. Leonard's fight by wide margin.

BROWNS' FLAG CHANCES SLIGHT, SAYS FULLERTON

This is the third of Hugh Fullerton's articles in which possible flag winners in the American and National leagues are doped as the teams go into the stretch drives of the major league races.

BY HUGH FULLERTON.
ARTICLE III.

HUGH FULLERTON.

St. Louis' Browns, the team which carries the highest hopes of the west to bring the American league pennant back to its proper section, are a tremendous disappointment to me after an intensive study of the men in every position, and a redoping.

When I reached St. Louis, armed with the dope figures, to study the team as it now is, it was with the conviction that it would be much stronger than it figured in March, and secretly I held the same hope that the majority of the fans of the United States do: that they finally will win a championship for the Mound city.

Instead I find the team weaker than it doped in March—and at the present time very much weaker because of injuries. Doped as it stands at this writing the Browns really have less chance to win the American league pennant than the White Sox have. The sole hope is that Sisler and Severeid get into action immediately and rally the team around them. George Burns of the Red Sox almost wrecked the Browns when, in one game he spiked Sisler and then, with a foul tip, almost tore the throwing finger off Severeid. With these two out the backbone of the Browns is fractured, for they are the pivotal points both in attack and defense.

Sisler Slumped When Injured.

The injury to Sisler, however, is not an unmixed blessing. He is due to return to the game the day this is printed, although the management would prefer to have him remain out several more days. When he was injured Sisler was in a slump and was badly run down nervously, and the enforced rest will do him great good, especially since the team has been winning without him. Severeid, however, is out for two weeks at least, and at a very critical stage to the Browns. Hank really is more important than is Sisler, since the Browns now must have steady pitching to hold in the race, and without Severeid the pitching staff is much weakened.

One of the miracles of baseball this season has been the pitching of the Browns. Starting with practically a one man staff, Shocker being the anchor, they have had more consistent pitching than almost any team in the league. Yet, examine the records, and you will see that the pitching has not been as great as results indicate. The success of the pitchers has been due to two things: Lee Fohl's uncanny judgment of which pitcher to use against certain teams, and Hank Severeid's handling of the pitchers, with the assistance of Lefty Leifield. From a bunch of disappointments and youngsters they have made a pitching staff. Fohl has used four right-handers against Boston, three of the four against Philadelphia; saved his left-handers and shot them at the Yankees, and switched from left to right against Cleveland, in order to force Speaker to change his lineup frequently.

Fohl's handling of the pitchers has brought the results. He has made one mistake, which has hurt badly. He has used Shocker at times when it was certain the star spit-baller was not right to work—and has lost three games recently by so doing. He may be trying desperately to work his star back into condition, but in his game against Philadelphia Shocker looked bad.

Pruett Promising Youngster.

Yet the pitching staff, even with Shocker off form, figures better than it did in March. Pruett is a promising young left-hander with a world of stuff. Wright is a kid with a peculiar and puzzling motion, and he is winning. Kolb has settled, and is working well; he has been a savior to the team. Dave Danforth, who was expected to bolster the team greatly, is a problem; he has shone brilliantly at times and badly at others. The constant attacks upon him and charges that he is doping the ball have shaken him somewhat, and when the Yankees found mud on one ball he was pitching, and he was suspended for ten days, it was almost the climax of tough luck.

Of course, the Browns are yelping hard luck. With Severeid's finger split, Sisler's leg cut open by spikes, and Ellerbe, Dixie Davis, and Shocker on the hospital list, there is cause for a cry. Ellerbe's leg slid out of joint, and he is just coming back. However, count against this the development of Van Gilder, who has become one of the best young pitchers in the country, and the luck does not appear so hard—to those outside.

But it is in the regular team that the Browns show a shocking falling off from the strength credited them in the spring dope. At first they hold their own in spite of Sisler's injuries. At least they lost nothing by his absence, and he figures nearly twenty points better on this season's form than he did on last. Second base figures just as it did, and that was not strong. Short shows an improvement of a few points and over at third Bronkie is holding his own with the dope figures.

Bronkie a Veteran and Steady.

The infield is not and never was a brilliant one after first base was passed, but Bronkie, a veteran considered for years nothing better than a minor leaguer, is playing steady ball, and his strong throwing helps a great deal. Gerber appears very weak in going out and relaying throws from the outfield.

The great loss shown by the team, aside from injuries, is in the outfield, which was touted as the best in the country. Williams, who has developed into the leading home run hitter of the country, is gaining strength not only on that account but because, with the confidence that comes from success, he is playing better in defensive. He alone shows a gain, and Jacobson reveals almost exactly the same strength he did in the spring.

The weak spot is Johnny Tobin, who shows a great loss of value, and his weakness seems to be known all around the circuit. His arm is weakening and he is throwing poorly. So glaring is this weakness that in the recent series with the Athletics every ball hit to right field was followed by howls from the Athletic bench for the runner to take two bases.

I seldom have seen poorer work in getting the ball back to the infield than the Browns showed, and in one game the Athletics gained four extra bases through this weakness alone.

Shorten Competent Sub.

Shorten, of course, is a competent sub, and a corking inside ball player, but the team was relying a great deal upon Tobin's hitting and his speed to overcome the natural advantage of the Yankees.

I find in St. Louis, among the players and those close to the team, a queer state; they are more afraid of the Chicago White Sox than they are of the Indians, and have a lot of confidence that they can beat the Yankees.

However, the study of the team does not encourage the hope of a pennant for the Browns. Instead of a greatly strengthened team, I find just an average team, with a lot of hitting power, ragged defense, considerable speed, a great catcher who is crippled, and a bunch of willing pitchers.

The team is hustling, fighting, and not discouraged. In makeup in almost every department it resembles the White Sox, and it is playing a quick switch game, first the slam, bang, slugging game of the Yankees, with a quick switch to pushing and bunting. It seems to be utilizing its speed fairly well on the bases.

The dope figures will show a slight net loss from the March dope—and what we will discover when we apply the strength of the team to the remaining games is hard to tell. The Browns must go east considerably crippled, although Sisler, Davis, and Ellerbe are recovering and are ready for duty, or will be in a few days.

If they avoid another slump during the eastern trip and Severeid gets back in shape to handle the pitchers we can figure them a chance to win—provided they beat the Yankees at least four out of their remaining seven games.

In the next article we will consider the Cleveland team—and its chances.

DODGERS CAPTURE TWO.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Both Brooklyn pitchers starred in the double header the Dodgers took from Cincinnati today, 5—0 and 3—2. Dazzy Vance registered his thirteenth victory of the season in the first game, while Cadore furnished a dramatic finish to a ten inning battle in the second when he drove the first ball pitched by Donohue in the tenth into the left field bleachers. Scores:

WHEN THE TIDE TURNED

The play that brought on the rout of the White Sox. In the seventh inning of yesterday's game Picinich grounded to Sheely with Peckinpaugh on first. Sheely heaved wild to Johnson at second, and the photo shows the shortstop making a vain leap for the ball. Another error and two hits followed, scoring five Washington runs.

BY FRANK SCHREIBER.

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Smashing base hits to every part of the lot and scoring in all but one inning, the Giants smothered the Cubs in the fourth game of the series here today, 19 to 7. Four Cub hurlers failed to stop the flood of base hits which the Giants unloosed to grab back the league leadership.

Twenty-seven hits were amassed by the champions, and included were four triples and five doubles. George Kelly, elongated first sacker for the Giants, led the swatting with five safeties. Kelly hit the ball for a triple, two doubles, and a pair of singles. Irish Meusel stood second in the hit total with four safeties, while Heinie Groh and Dave Bancroft collected three each.

Cheeves Routed Early.

Cheeves started the runaway for the Bears, but was removed in the first inning after the locals had turned three runners over the plate. George Stueland, Percy Jones, and Ed Morris, the recruit hurler recently obtained from Chattanooga, followed in order, but the swatting went on. Stueland was yanked in the third inning, while Jones went by the board in the fourth. Morris was left in to face the fire and was able to finish.

Jess Barnes, who defeated the Cubs in the last series in Chicago, started for McGraw, but John saw fit to yank the long hurler in the third inning in which the Cubs pushed the ball around the diamond for three tallies. Jonnard followed Barnes and had little trouble, due to startling fielding and the heavy clouting by his mates. But Jonnard was kicked for three runs in the eighth and McGraw relieved him, and Virgil Barnes attended to the twirling in the ninth.

To relate just how the Giants counted their tallies would fill a book. It is enough to say that the champs counted three runs in the first and second, two in the third, four in the fourth, three in the fifth and sixth and one in the seventh. The eighth was the only frame that the locals failed to produce a tally.

Charlie Hollocher, Ray Grimes, Heathcote, and Terry tried their best to cut down the Giant hits, but their best efforts couldn't stop the champs. It was the same old story of bad pitching.

Fans Are Happy.

After the Giants had jumped off with their unbeatable lead, the crowd of 22,000 fans, who turned out for the fray, started to entreat the Giant pitchers to lay balls over the heart of the plate for the Cubs. It was one of those acts that started the rout of Jess Barnes, for when he laid one over for Charlie Hollocher, Holly crashed the ball into the right field stand for a home run, scoring Stueland, who had singled ahead of him. It was a very good day for the Giant men who, besides grabbing back first place in the standing, fattened their batting averages and won back the oozing confidence of the New York fans.

FAMOUS CHICAGOS PLAY PYOTTS TODAY ON LATTER'S FIELD

FAMOUS Chicagos will be the attraction this afternoon at Pyott field. The Chicagos are battling to keep in second place and the Pyotts to stay in the first division. Dick Kerr will pitch against either Jimmy Baxter or "Slicker" Parks of the Pyotts.

At Logan Square the leading Midwest club will tackle Jimmy Ryan's reconstructed home nine. The Squares have won six out of seven games since he assumed the management. Hagerman or Fischer will do slab duty for Ryan, while Manager Chubb will send in his star, Big Jim Vaughn, whose record is twenty-three victories in twenty-five starts. The third game on the Midwest schedule will be played at Kenosha, where the Simmons and Joliet clash.

Marquette Manors will play an exhibition with the Cubans, one of the crack teams from the Negro National league. American Giants will entertain Pontiac, one of the best independent teams in the section. Grover Lowdermilk, former big league star, will be on the hill for Pontiac. Following is the schedule of today's important semi-pro games:

Famous Chicagos at Pyott field; Beloit at Logan Square; Joliet at Kenosha; Cubans at Marquette Manor; Pontiac and American Giants at Schorling's; Milwaukee at Racine; Justins and Cermaks at 26th and Kedzie; Fitzgeralds and Cardinals at 74th and Aberdeen; Division A. C. and Roosevelts at Crane; winner to play home club; Forges Post and West Side Sportsmen at Polk and Des Plaines.

The permanent top is the coming top. Collapsible tops are obsolete. Choose the Westcott—the only car with a permanent top as standard equipment. No extra cost or weight.

Why Buy An Obsolete Top?

The old-style collapsible top will become practically obsolete on all fine cars within the next two years. We base this prediction on the results of a survey just completed by our designing department among 5000 average car buyers.

The results show an overwhelming preference among open car users for the California type permanent top, which combines the advantages of both open and closed models.

Westcott is the only car on which a permanent California type top is furnished as standard equipment.

A Westcott California type permanent top is heavily bowed, steel reinforced, steel sheathed, with a double covering and an inner lining—weighs 15 pounds less than the ordinary cape top. It will keep its shape and fine appearance through years of hard service.

For $125 extra, we can supply our special Chicago rigid frame plate glass winter enclosures, which give practically all the advantages of a closed car with a great saving in weight and expense. It is the latest, most practical enclosure yet devised. Two center glass panels raise and lower for ventilation like closed car windows. Proof against rattles.

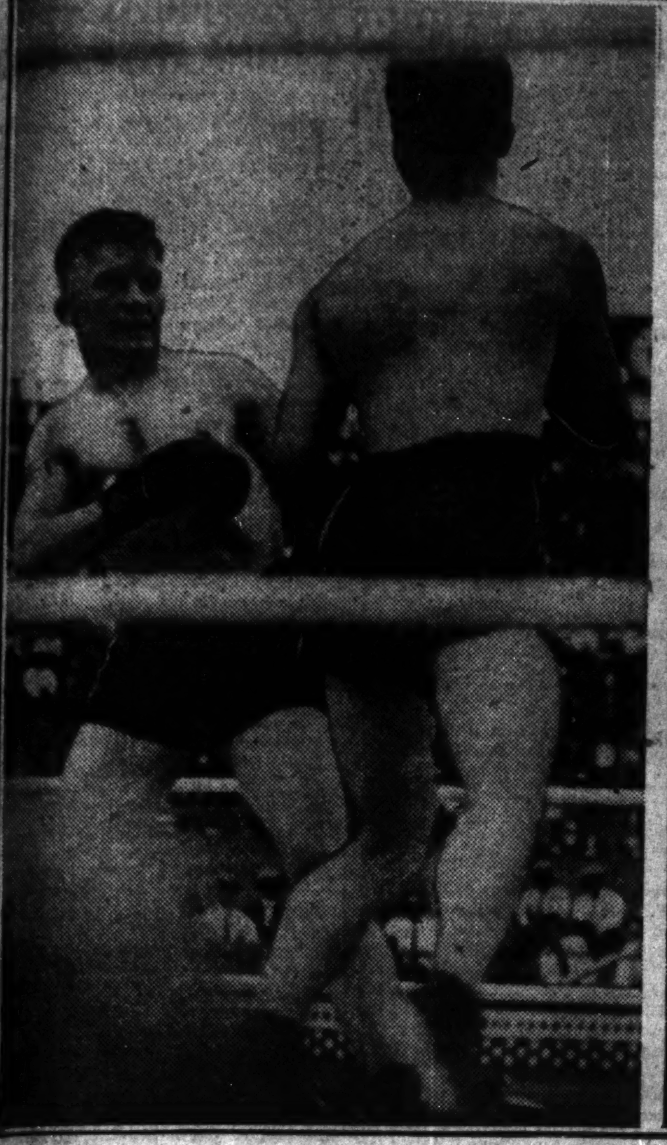
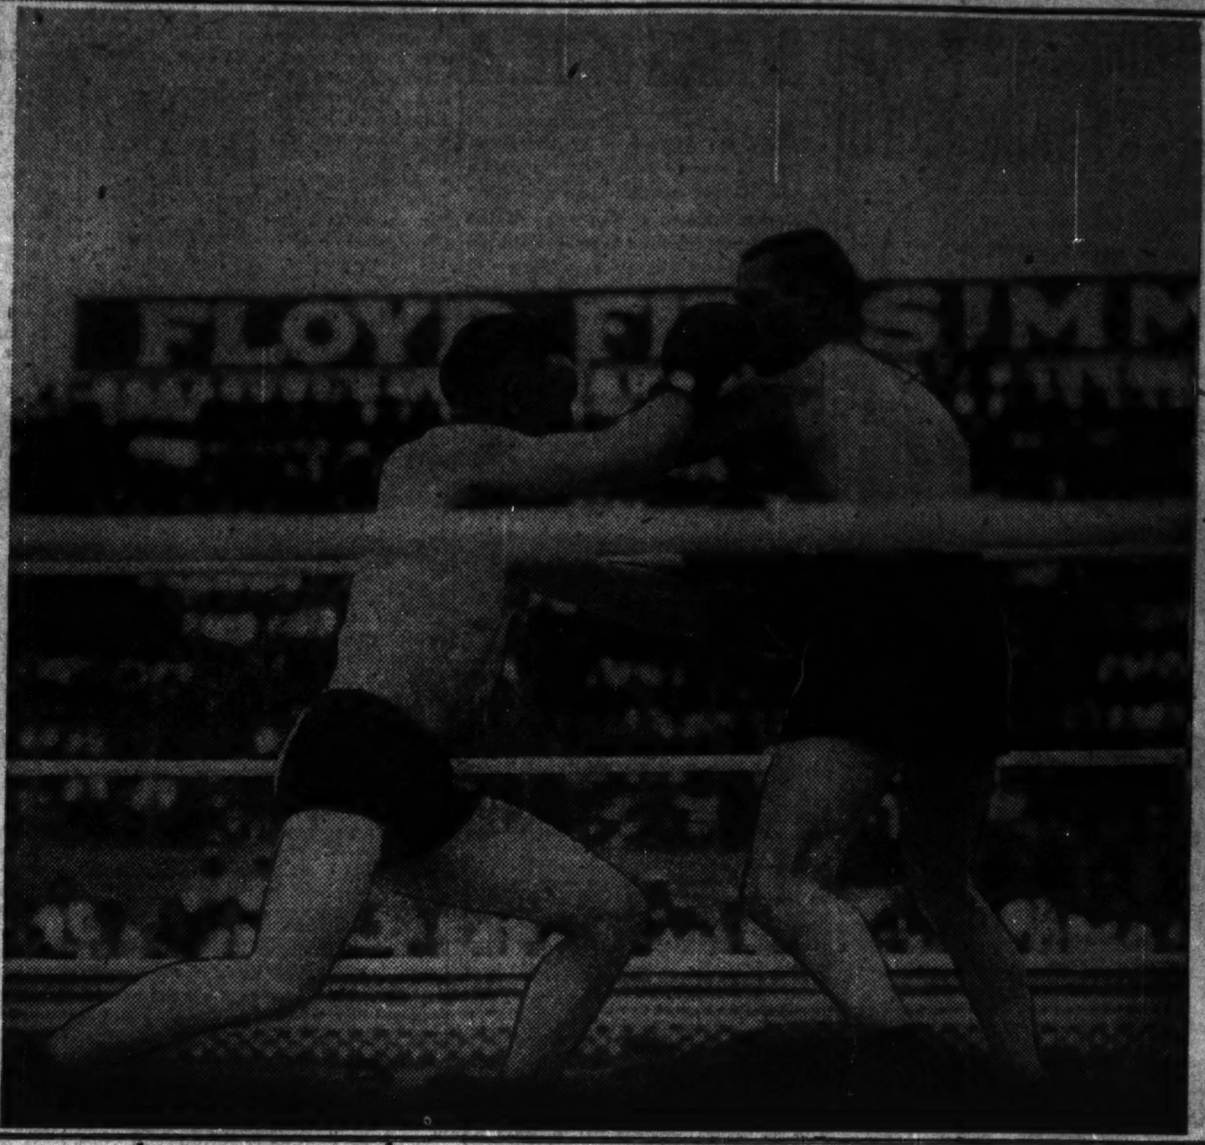
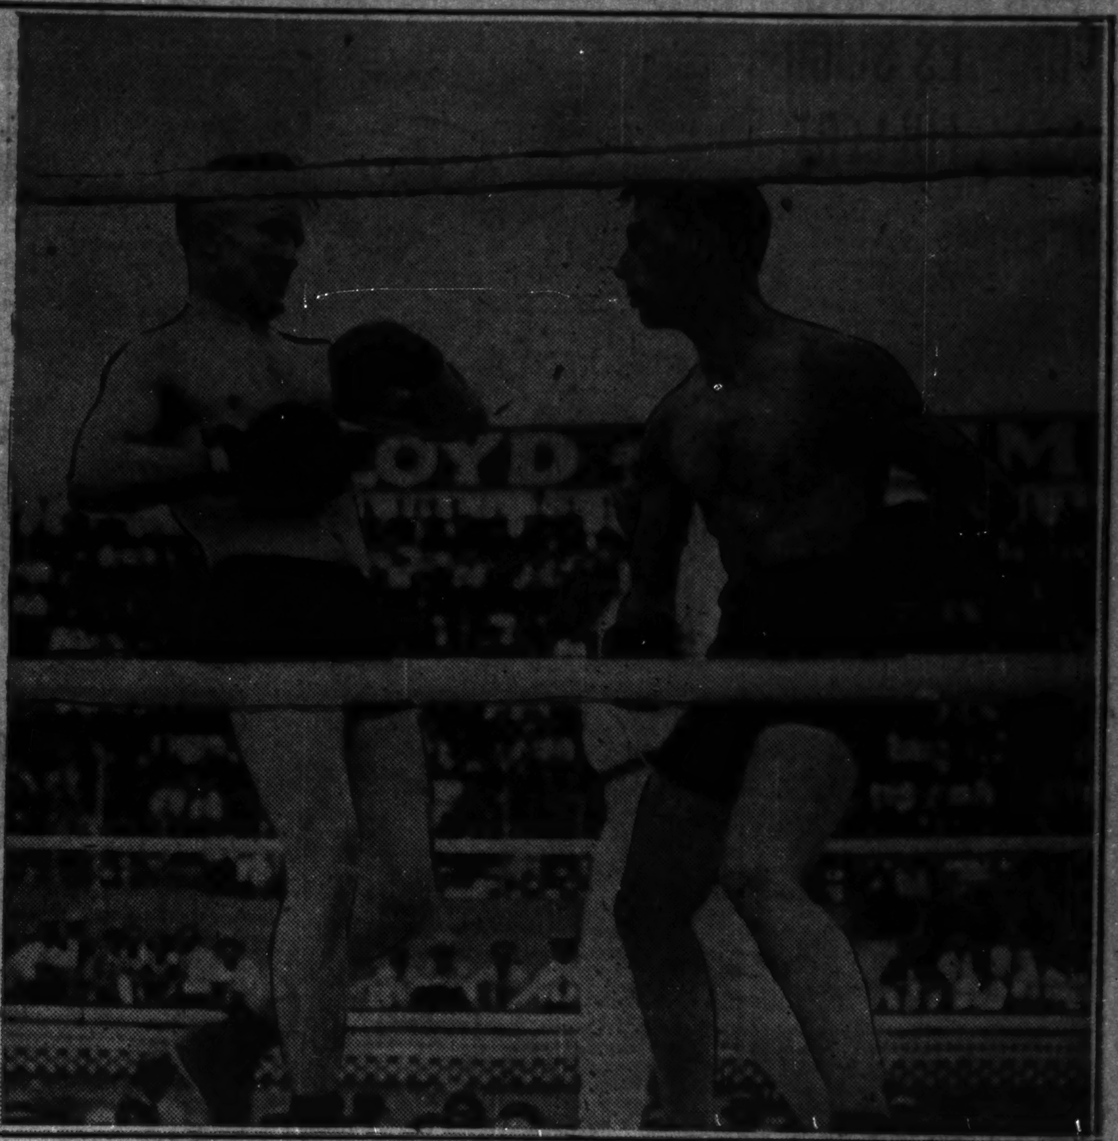
ILLUSTRATING HOW CHAMPION BENNIE LEONARD GAVE EVER HAMMER A BOXING LESSON



In this photo Hammer is shown facing the camera. His facial expression indicates that he has been stung and that he is not feeling extraordinarily happy in the predicament in which he finds himself.



In the first round Hammer was cautioned by Referee Miller not to hit low. The camera caught the local lad's fist socking the champion just below the belt. From that time on Hammer was more careful and it wasn't necessary to warn him again. This, according to the story from the ringside, was only a "feeling out" round, and there was little damage done by either boxer.



As the battle wore on, Hammer was anxious to get inside all the time, and in this picture it looks as if the Swede was somewhat worried. His expression indicates that he was a bit afraid of the champion and looked for the worst at any minute. But who wouldn't be a bit alarmed for his safety if he was on the short end of a one-sided bout? Ever never had a chance, and the picture indicates he realized it.

WALLACE-SCHAEFFER TO MEET IN AURORA

Patsy Wallace, the newest eastern bantamweight flash, will trade wallops with Herbie Schaeffer in the first half of the double windup boxing show carded at Aurora Friday night. Mike Dundee and Eddie Anderson are to do battle in the other half of the big bill.

Wallace has come to the front in eastern banty circles in remarkable fashion, and will be one of the participants in the bantam weight elimination tourney Tex Rickard expects to conduct in New York in the near future. Schaeffer has beaten some of the best boys in the Chicago district, and his clash with Wallace is likely to carry plenty of action. It required some little jockeying before Jim Mullen was able to make the match.

Dundee and Anderson will return to Chicago early this week to resume training. They were in good trim when the street car strike halted the Aurora show last week, and it will take only a few days to put them back on edge again.

TOM M'CARTHY, OLD BOSTON STAR BALL PLAYER, DIES

Boston, Mass., Aug. 5.—Tommy McCarthy, old time ball player, later one of the leading college coaches, and of recent years a scout for several major league ball clubs, died here today.

McCarthy was a member of one of the greatest teams ever assembled—the Boston team of the days of Long, Lowe, Duffy, McCarthy and Hamilton. He was a rival of Hamilton and Duffy as a base runner, and a great hitter, and was accounted by many as the greatest throwing outfielder and one of the smartest players of baseball history.

After dropping out of baseball, McCarthy was in business in Boston for a number of years, then managed several minor teams and coached at Holy Cross, Dartmouth and Boston colleges. He and Manager Hugh Duffy of the Red Sox were known as the "heavenly twins" to fandom of the nineteenth century.

OKLAHOMA COLT GATHERS $10,075 SARATOGA STAKE

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Martingale, Oklahoma bred horse, carrying 130 pounds and running under J. S. Cosden's colors, won the United States hotel stake of six furlongs, valued at $10,075 to the winner, today. Chickvale was second by two lengths, and Cartoonist third.

Martingale proved himself one of the best mud running juveniles of the year, as he conceded weight to twelve horses. Chickvale ran a remarkable race after being virtually left at the post. The time was 1:15, accounted for by the heavy track.

Mr. Cosden left a sick bed to witness his colt's brilliant performance.

Vidmar Beats Bogoljubow in World Chess Tourney

LONDON, England, Aug. 5.—After today's play in the fifth round of the international chess tournament, A. Alechine, the Russian player, was leading with a score of 5 points. M. [illegible]ko Borowsky resigned to Capablanca in today's play; Gates defeated Ma[illegible]; Rubenstein defeated Watson; Vidmar beat Bogoljubow; Morrison defeated Euwe; Alechine defeated Atkins; and the games between Reti and Tartakower and Wahltuch and Maroczy were drawn.

HOW BOUT APPEARED TO THE BOXERS AFTER IT BECAME HISTORY

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., Aug. 5.—The following statements from the Bennie Leonard and Ever Hammer camps were issued following their ten round encounter here this evening:

LEONARD—My eye bothered me slightly in the early rounds because I had it on my mind. However, when the patch came off I knew there was no more use worrying about it, and I forgot there was anything wrong during the remainder of the bout. I am glad I will be able to go to Europe without leaving a single challenger for the title in this country unsatisfied.

HAMMER — Leonard is the greatest lightweight in the world. I fought a hard battle, but could not solve him. I hope to meet him at some future date.

LANDIS RAPS AT TRADES, ASKING JULY 1 DEADLINE

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—F. W. Vesper, president of the St. Louis chamber of commerce, today received a letter from Baseball Commissioner K. M. Landis, in which the supreme arbiter of baseball said he would suggest at the next joint meeting of the American and National leagues that the date for interclub exchanging of players shall be July 1 instead of Aug. 1.

In the letter, which was in reply to one sent by Vesper to Commissioner Landis protesting against the New York-Boston trade in the American league, in which the Yankees obtained Joe Dugan, third baseman, and Elmer Smith, outfielder, in exchange for several players, Landis concurred in the protest. He said the protest was well taken and that the trade was "like removing or adding a handicap when the horses are coming down the stretch."

A similar letter was received by Vesper from John A. Heydler, president of the National league, who promised serious consideration of the problem. President Heydler wrote that "no one will dispute that belated trades are distasteful to patrons of the game, as well as to a majority of those financially interested in the teams."

CHICAGO PLAYERS TO COMPETE IN BADGER NET PLAY

Several Chicago players will compete in the Wisconsin state tennis championship, which will begin Saturday and continue until Aug. 23 on the clay courts of the Town club of Milwaukee. Entry lists close Friday. This year's tourney will inaugurate the presentation of a new trophy in singles, the former open challenge cup having been retired last year by Alfred Weller, who won it for the third time.

Matches will include men's and women's singles, men's and women's doubles and mixed doubles. Special arrangements are being made for out of town visitors at the Milwaukee A. C.

Tate Breaks Hand, but Finishes, Only to Lose

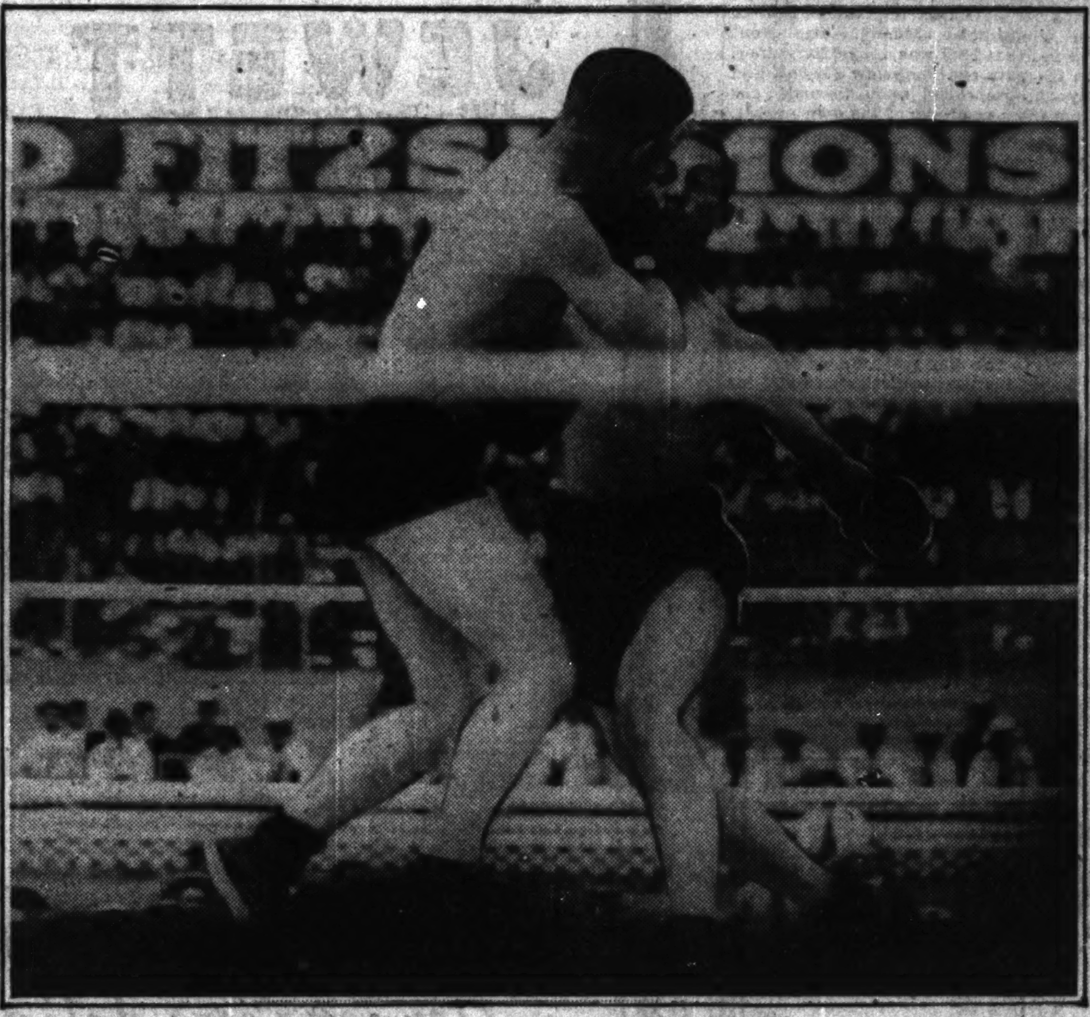
Tulsa, Okla., Aug. 5.—Sam Langford, Negro heavyweight, was given a referee's decision over Big Bill Tate, Chicago Negro, after twelve slow rounds of fighting. Tate broke his right hand in the fourth round, but finished the fight.

INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE.

Peoples Gas Light and Coke company strengthened its lead in Zone No. 2 of the Industrial Athletic league, by defeating La Salle Extension university at Washington Park, 6 to 2. Beall of the Gas club allowed his opponents one hit, while Ginty starred at bat. Score:

Peoples Gas club.....010 112 001—6 11 1
La Salle Exten. Univ.000 110 000—2 1 3

Batteries—Beall and Burns; Mahoney and Mannion.



This picture shows Leonard bringing up a left uppercut to Ever's jaw and also shows that Hammer sees it coming and is prepared to block the blow, which, had it landed, probably would have set the birdies singing in the local lad's ears. [TRIBUNE Photos.]

NOTES OF THE BIG BOUT

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—George Ferguson, manager of Ever Hammer, took his boxer from the cottage on the beach last night and parked him in the Spalding hotel. Ferguson said Hammer needed a good rest on the night before the battle.

Members of the John Franklin Miller post of the American Legion acted as ushers and handled the crowd nicely. Every spectator secured the seat his ticket called for, according to Promoter Fitzsimmons.

Davie Miller, official referee of the entire show, was on the job early and prepared for a busy afternoon. Miller's appointment met popular approval and he was given a big hand when he was introduced.

Gate Crusher Society Kid Hogan of Chicago, who is a close rival of One Eye Connelly of New York in worming his way through the gates, occupied one of the seats in the press stand.

Darby Kelly acted in his usual capacity of announcer.

Jim Mullen, the Aurora promoter, was on hand to look over the doings.

There was little or no betting on the result of the big contest. A few wagers were made at evens that Hammer would stay the ten rounds. It was generally conceded Leonard has too much class and that Ever would have to let go with a wild punch to win. Hammer's gameness combined with a strong left hand punch, were considered his principal assets.

Johnny Mendelsohn, the Milwaukee lightweight, came down this morning to challenge the winner. Elmer Dickerson, Grand Rapids promoter, practically clinched a match between Mendelsohn and Hammer for Grand Rapids early next month.

Ald. Johntry, a great athlete at Hyde Park High school in the old days, was a great Hammer booster. He picked Ever to win by the K. O. route and had a lot of friends thinking the same way.

Ald. Anton J. Cermak and Joseph Kostner, sponsors of a boxing bill for Chicago, led a party of aldermen at the ringside, where they got some dope on how the boxing game can be put across.

D. F. Shogren, Milwaukee sportsman, and a party of Milwaukee friends were seated close to the ring.

A band was on the job early to furnish entertainment for the early arrivals.

Fleischmann Disposes of Interest in Reds

Cincinnati, O., Aug. 5.—It was announced here today that Julius Fleischmann, former mayor of Cincinnati, now of New York, has sold his entire holdings in the Cincinnati baseball team, 685 shares, to Lou Widrig, August Herrmann, and Walter Friedlander, who are already heavy owners.

PATTERSON'S NET CHALLENGE TO TILDEN DROPPED

Seabright, N. J., Aug. 5.—Gerald L. Patterson, captain of the Australian Davis cup team and winner of the recent international tournament at Wimbledon, has decided to withdraw his suggestion for a world title match with Tilden, the American champion. He said as he intends to play in the American national singles tournament he believes the winner can without hesitancy claim world supremacy.

Firpo to Meet Tracy in Buenos Aires on Oct. 8

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, Aug. 5.—Louis Angel Firpo, heavyweight champion of South America, is to meet Jim Tracy, Australian champion, here Oct. 8, it was announced today by Jose Augusti, boxing promoter. The bout will be of fifteen rounds with six ounce gloves. The promoter hopes to arrange a match in this city between Bill Brennan and Firpo for next March.

ALLIS EASILY WINS BADGER GOLF TITLE

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 5.—Ned Allis, Milwaukee Country club, won the Wisconsin Golf association championship for the sixth time today, when he overwhelmingly defeated Richard P. Cavanagh, Pike Creek Country club, Kenosha, 9 and 8. It was the biggest defeat suffered by Cavanagh in a golf match since he entered his first state tournament, eighteen years ago. Also, it gives Allis six victories to five for Cavanagh in Badger title meets.

The pair were all square at the end of the first nine holes, Allis' medal card showing thirty-nine strokes and Cavanagh's thirty-eight.

Allis shot steadily brilliant golf after that and led 4 up at the end of eighteen holes, scoring a 35, two under par. Cavanagh, besides being wild and inaccurate off the tees, putted porly. The Kenosha man never had a chance in the afternoon.

BENNY LEAVES FOR EAST TODAY; BRITAIN IS NEXT

Michigan City, Ind., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Bennie Leonard, Manager Gibson, and party will leave for home on the Wolverine tomorrow morning. The champion's manager said he has several offers in view and Leonard appears determined to take a trip to Europe next month to box Ernie Rice, the English lightweight champion.

Hammer and his party will go home some time tomorrow, according to present plans. The boxer's wife is here and he may remain over a few days.

Manager Ferguson plans on taking a match with Johnny Mendelsohn of Milwaukee at Grand Rapids next month.

A FINER COLUMBIA SIX
(With a New Continental "Red Seal" Motor)
THE ÉLITE TOURING

A car already known for beauty, made more beautiful still by refinements in line and richness of finish—

A notably roomy, comfortable car, to which even greater comfort has been added through deeper cushion springs and better upholstering—

A car of proved dependability, power and economy, all further increased by a new motor—the 8-R Continental "Red Seal"—a 58 horsepower engine that represents the latest achievement of Continental's master motor builders—

A motor car in which every major unit is the product of a nationally recognized specialist, with automatically controlled radiator shutters, cowl ventilator, Moto-Meter, wire wheels, cord tires—an unusual generosity in details of equipment.

For those who prefer the low-cut lines and striking appearance of the finer type of sport car, the same features and refinements are provided in the Elite Sport Model.

Demonstration appointments are being made daily.

THOMPSON ROSS TOPS ALGONQUIN SHOOT PRELIMS

A. H. WINKLER.

Thompson Ross was high gun in the Algonquin introductory shoot at Lincoln Park Gun club yesterday, breaking 97 of a possible 100 targets; A. H. Winkler and W. E. Warren finished in a tie for second place, each getting 96 breaks.

More than 150 trap shooters from all parts of the middle west will compete in the Algonquin benefit shoot at the Lincoln park traps today. Included in the entry list are several district and state champions. O. Larson, Wisconsin state titleholder, wired last night that he would arrive early today, accompanied by three other trap experts from Waupaca.

Local Shots Entered.

A big majority of Chicago's leading trap shooters have been entered, and much interest aroused. The Algonquin shoot will serve as a preliminary to the zone shoot in Indianapolis this week.

To get to the Lincoln Park Gun club at Diversey and the lake, take any transportation to Diversey, go east through the park, and the traps are located just beyond the golf shelter at the lake.

Leading scores in the introductory shoot yesterday follow:

100 TARGETS, 16 YARDS [REGISTERED].

CLASS A—Thompson Ross, 97; A. H. Winkler, 96; W. E. Warren, 96; H. Kennicott, 94; E. C. Buchan, 93; Dean Bergen, 93; W. H. Miller, 93; L. P. Portman, 93; D. L. Kammerer, 92; H. E. L. Timm, 92; H. E. Dickerman, 90; D. J. Dalton, 87.

CLASS B—P. Startz, 93; W. Hopkins, 91; E. B. Poe, 91; W. Boltman, 91; A. J. Henley, 90; C. O. Armes, 89; A. Eagan, 88; J. B. [illegible], 83.

CLASS C—O. H. Hassel, 88; Dr. F. W. Belknap, 83; Col. Jaques, 79; E. Kutselas, 78; D. Avent, 72; S. Fitton, 70.

CLASS D—Jack Eagan, 73; C. W. Ebbole, 63; T. Sutton, 58; W. H. Mikkelson, 56.

MISS WAINWRIGHT WILL SHOW SKILL

National and city champion swimmers and divers will appear in the weekly exhibition today at Edgewater beach. Miss Helen Wainwright, women's national swimming champion and winner of the river swim yesterday, will be one of the participants today. Others include:

Al White, Olympic club of San Francisco, national men's diving champion.
Arthur Hartung, I. A. C. diver.
Bill Heyn, C. A. A. diver.
Ed Smith, winner of the city diving title Wednesday.
Frances Coleman, crack Duluth girl swimmer.
Norman Ross, holder of numerous world water records.

Thalheimer and White Win S. W. Tennis Title

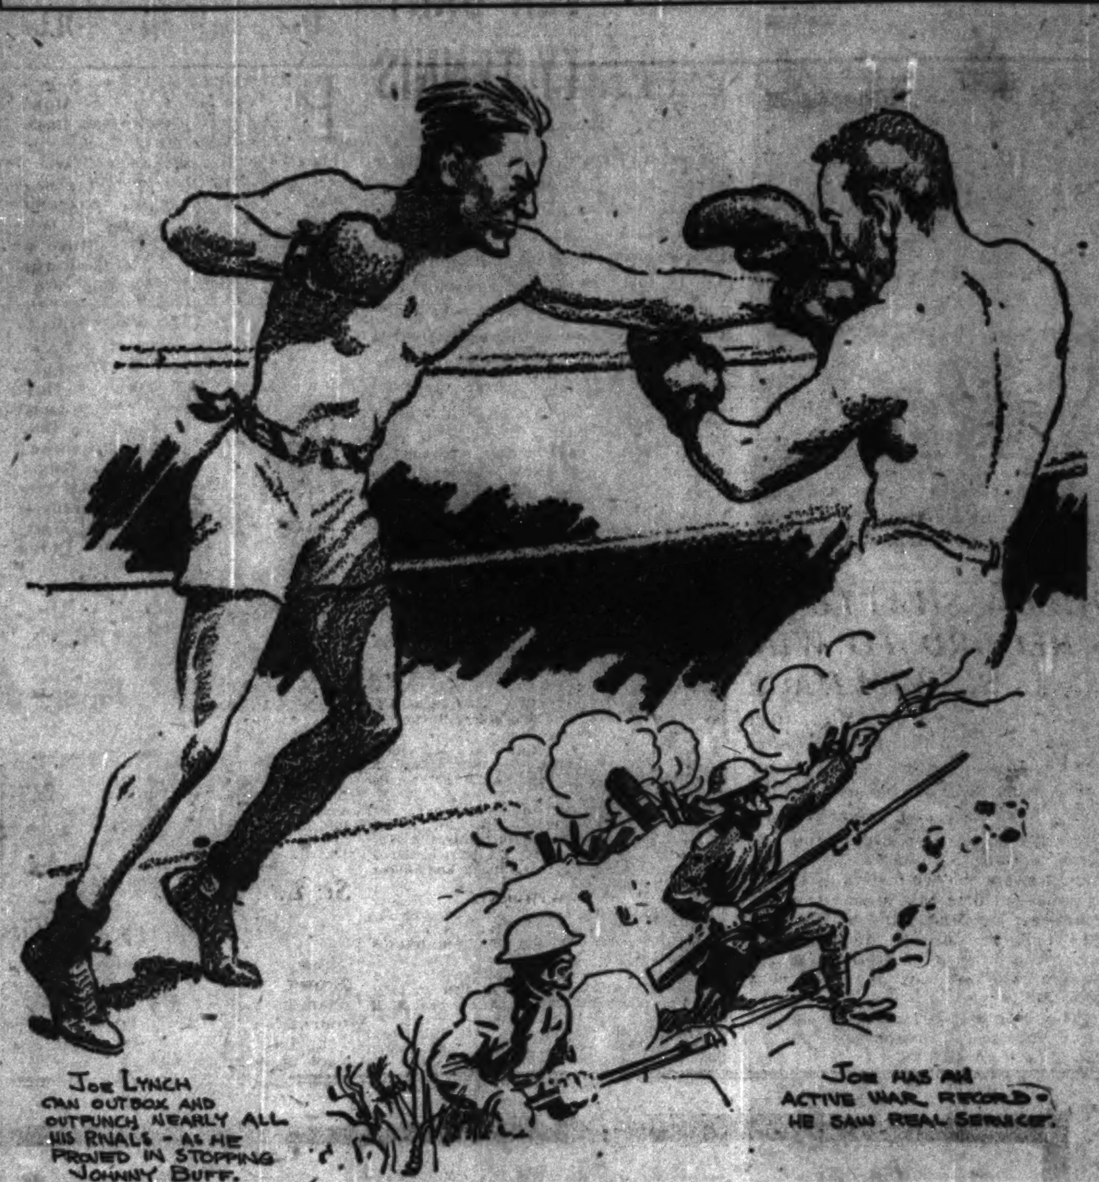
JOE LYNCH'S COMEBACK



JOE LYNCH CAN OUTBOX AND OUTPUNCH NEARLY ALL HIS RIVALS - AS HE PROVED IN STOPPING JOHNNY BUFF.
JOE HAS AN ACTIVE WAR RECORD - HE SAW REAL SERVICE.

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

OLD timers used to say that "they never come back." In those old days a champion licked, in a long fight of from twenty rounds to a finish, was usually so well licked that he lost ambition.

Joe Lynch never took a real licking in his life. Perhaps that's why he came back into the bantamweight championship by stopping Johnny Buff. I've known Joe Lynch rather well for several years and always liked to see him fight. He's a fighting Irishman by descent and an American fighter by education. His eyes sparkle with interest and pleasure when the other fellow hits him a devastating wallop on the chin.

Joe Lynch is the kind of a fellow who can't be discouraged. The tougher the fight the more fun he has. Instead of delighting in "trimming a sap" Joe is disgusted when he finds himself in the ring with a poor fish who can't clip him a clout on the chin.

You see, Joe grew up on the east side in New York, where his father ran an express wagon.

Joe's Defeat of Loadman.

When the war came along young Joe Lynch was already famous as the man who knocked out Kid Williams. The bantam championship at that time was in a muddle, Williams having lost on an alleged "foul" to one "Kewpie" Ertle. Dick Loadman of Buffalo handled Ertle the brass bound works and there was some question as to whether Joe Lynch or Dick Loadman had the better claim to the bantam championship.

About this time Joe Lynch was called into the service and went into the 52d pioneer infantry, Col. Foster's regiment. It was a great fighting regiment. Billy Wellman, then famous the country over as the "boy promoter," who started by building a velodrome at 16 years of age and not long afterward ran big auto races, air contests, and boxing bouts, was in the ranks.

About this time I was getting up a boxing show at Madison Square garden for the army athletic fund, with Billy Wellman's assistance, and got Joe Lynch a furlough just before the regiment's departure for France, so that he could fight Dick Loadman.

Lynch's Come Back a Surprise.

Joe astonished the sporting world by whipping Kid Herman of New Orleans, bantam champion, a few days before Herman went to England for an international championship fight with Jimmy Wilde. The astonishment grew when Herman knocked Wilde out, showing that he hadn't lost any class. Coming back Herman beat a lot of good bantams and then got another fight with Lynch. At this time Joe seemed to be in a slump. He was so skinny you could stand behind him and count his front ribs. He was eager and quick, but his strength wasn't there. He lost the championship, and although after a rest he came back and fought with greater skill and speed than ever.

Meanwhile Johnny Buff, the rugged and redoubtable flyweight champion, fought Kid Herman and unexpectedly gave him the beating of his young life. Buff is only a 113 pounder, but he could slug with any of them. Perhaps Buff's manager, looking around for some one for Johnny to beat—some bankroll fattener—picked Joe Lynch because Joe was popularly supposed to be slipping.

In any case Joe was picked and he was so anxious to have a chance to win back the title that he allowed Buff to be guaranteed $30,000. The event proved that Buff was a good bargainer, as the gate ran far below $30,000, and Lynch was called upon to make the guarantee good out of his own pocket.

The crowd came to the fight expecting to see Buff rip into Lynch and beat him loose from his foundations. Buff had the same idea. He rushed and plunged and tried to slug, but Joe foiled him at every point with bewildering speed and skill.

Joe's in the Dixon Class.

Joe Lynch is a great boxer, with much speed and one of the coolest heads in the ring when under fire. In view of his past performances and his come-back to the championship, he should be ranked with the great little men of Dixon's day. He resembles them in many ways.

Incidentally in winning back a lost championship, Joe Lynch has performed a rare feat. Stanley Ketchel did it when he beat Billy Papke. Jack Britton and Kid Lewis each performed a couple of come-back welterweight championship fights between themselves, and Kid Herman lost and won a world title. But that about ends the list. All other beaten champions "stayed put."

Paul Costello Wins National Sculls Title in Big Regatta

PAUL COSTELLO.
[P. & A. Photo.]

Philadelphia, Aug. 5.—Paul V. Costello of the Vesper Boat club of Philadelphia, today was crowned American amateur champion in the golden jubilee national regatta when he beat Hilton A. Belyea of St. John, N. B., champion of Canada, by five feet, in a gruelling struggle. Costello's time was 7 minutes, 27 1-5 seconds.

Walter M. Hoover of Duluth, diamond sculls hero, and national champion of last year, did not defend his title, although he was present and took part in an exhibition with Jack Kelly, world's retired sculling champion.

Belyea led Costello a half mile from the finish, but the Philadelphian caught and beat him off in a bitter sculling batle.

Jim Ten Eyck's Duluth crew No. 1, won the senior eight oared championship from West Philadelphia club, with the University of Toronto, champions of Canada, third.

West Philadelphia was beaten out in the last quarter mile by the Duluth Giants. The Toronto eight closed in and touched its oars against the Duluth shell. Coxswain Campbell, steered a poor course in the final drive or his crew might have nosed out the Minnesota sweeps.

The New York Athletic club won the intermediate double shells championship, beating the Bachelors Barge club pair by two lengths in 7:20 1-5. The Arundels of Baltimore was a scant length behind and the Nassau Boat club of New York, fourth, with the Undine Barge club, fifth, and Ponchartrain Rowing club, New Orleans, last.

In the three days of racing, Philadelphia won nine races, Duluth and New York four each, Baltimore two, and Canada one.

SENIOR DOUBLE SHELLS—Won by Bachelors' Barge club, Philadelphia [William E. Hapgood, bow; W. E. Garrett Gilmore, stroke]. Time, 7 minutes 5 seconds.

SENIOR FOUR OARED SHELLS—Won by Duluth Boat club [W. Coventry, bow; D. Dever, L. Ward, L. Letourneau, stroke]. Time, 7:00.

SENIOR QUADRUPLE SHELLS—Won by Vesper Boat club, Philadelphia [W. Nelson, bow; G. Filoon, Paul Costello, S. Moorhead, stroke]. Time, 6:34.

SENIOR EIGHT OARED SHELLS—Won by Duluth Boat club [Crew No. 1], Duluth, Minn. [A. Kodin, bow; E. Johnson, J. Bjerkman, W. Councilman, C. Holmerud, H. Quade, F. Champion, J. Howard, stroke]. Time, 6:20 2-5.

CHAMPIONSHIP SINGLE SHELLS—Won by Paul V. Costello, Vesper Boat club, Philadelphia. Time, 7:27 1-5.

DENNINGER WINS IN CANOE RACE AT PIER PAGEANT

F. C. Denninger of the Riverside Boat club proved himself most adept in the canoe races held off the municipal pier in the regatta under auspices of the American Canoe association yesterday. Denninger led the contestants to the mark in the gunwale race, and placed second to A. C. Ebbeson of the Columbia club in the tail end race. C. C. Davis of the Wilson club paddled home a winner in the overboard contest, with W. Martens and Dale McDonald of Maywood trailing.

In the mixed doubles, Miss Carson and W. Carson of Columbia took first honors, and D. Dow and Earl Coombs of South Shore emerged with canoe tilting honors. The events attracted an entry list of over 100, and were witnessed by a big crowd. Canoe sports again will hold sway at the pier this morning, starting at 10:30.

DUKE DUNNE OF MICHIGAN FAME TO COACH AT N. U.

News comes from Ann Arbor that Duke [Robert Jerome] Dunne, star tackle on the Wolverine football eleven for three years, and captain last season, will not return to the University of Michigan next fall, but will continue his law studies at Northwestern university. As a sideline, Dunne will join the Purple coaching staff.

Ample power for its weight gives Jewett its delightful performance

Easily a powerful man handles a 100-lb. weight, which a weaker man might struggle to lift. Here you have the secret of Jewett performance—ample power to handle the weight.

A powerful man might play with a 100-lb. weight for hours and not wear out, while a weaker man would be used up quickly. Here you have one of the secrets of Jewett endurance—ample power, a motor seldom taxed to capacity, with long life assured by high pressure lubrication.

The Jewett with its ample power costs little, if any, more to buy—nothing more to run. Yet the difference is a performance so delightful—so amazing, compared with the average car—that all who try it want it.

Jewett power, compared with its weight, means 50 H. P. in a 2805-lb. car. Decidedly a sturdy car—400 lbs. heavier than some its size—more piston displacement than ANY car its size. And every pound of this extra weight is fine material.

It is this extra power for weight that gives the Jewett its extra ability—to accelerate from 5 to 25 miles an hour in 7 seconds—top Hubbard Hill at 33 miles an hour from a standing start at the bottom in high gear. Try it with your car and learn how superbly powered is the Jewett.

Accept this invitation to try Jewett smoothness, ease of handling that comes from ample power, ball-bearing steering spindles, new type spring clutch, and gear shifting without conscious effort. Its continued riding comfort over the roughest roads will be a delightful experience.

Six Reasons "The Fair" Guarantees the Delion Tire

EXTRA thick, specially compounded semi-crown tread, so designed that 30% of the entire surface takes the strain of wear immediately. Wearing surface 10% greater than that of other tires.

THE carcass is built up of layer upon layer of strong cords applied diagonally. Each cord imbedded in pure rubber, making cutting or fraying action of the cords impossible. The result is a tire which is tough, resilient and cool-running.

BRAIDED wire bead, imbedded in semi-hard rubber, eight times as strong as required. Accurately fitted and tied in, it assures against stretching, broken beads or "rim jumping." Double chafing strips give the surest protection against rim-cutting.

EXTRA shock absorber strip of cushion rubber—an improvement that enables us to guarantee absolutely against the loosening or separation of the tread. One of the most important discoveries in tire-making.

DELION users are not troubled with the usual stone bruises and fabric breaks because a pure gum breaker strip and cushion much thicker than that generally used absorb shocks and protect the cord body of the tire.

HEAVY sidewalls are made of a secret compound which withstands the tendency to check and crack. It prevents moisture reaching the cords to cause separation, and dirt or sand to work in and cause blisters.

MISS WAINWRIGHT EASY WINNER IN RIVER MARATHON

Helen Wainwright, national champion women swimmer, was an easy winner yesterday in the annual women's river marathon staged from the Municipal pier to the Wells street bridge over the Chicago river. She defeated the field of thirty-four swimmers by two blocks. Her time for the two and a quarter miles was 40 minutes and 47 seconds.

FLORENCE GAITHER.

Two of last year's stars, Florence Gaither of the I. A. C., and Florence Coleman of Duluth finished second and third, respectively.

Chicago won fourth honors in the long swim when Ethel Lackie, wearing the colors of the Sinai Social center, finished close behind the Duluth natator. Sinai swimmers also finished fifth and sixth, Frieda Silvert and Helen Joyce, arriving in that order.

Thousands of spectators lined the banks of the river and crowded the bridges to witness the aquatic marathon.

Winner Was Favorite.

Miss Wainwright swam under the colors of the New York Women's Swimming association, and because of past performances entered the race a strong favorite.

The swim is considered the aquatic classic of the middle west and provides a means of rating the girl distance swimmers of the country. Three quarters of a mile of the race is in still water, the rest with the current of the river.

Forty girls were originally entered in the marathon yesterday. At the last moment, however, six of these were forced to withdraw. They were Sarah Chapman, Frances Beiman, Rose Rodkin, Mabel Merritt, Janet Dow, and Jean Feinboldt.

Women Receive Trophies.

Proof of the interest with which the affair is regarded by swimming associations is the fact that last year only twenty-four girls were entered, while this year the number of entrants was forty. They came from all parts of the country. Medals and trophies are awarded the winners.

For the first part of the race the field of swimmers remained fairly closely bunched. Not until the river was reached did Miss Wainwright begin to forge to the front.

Each swimmer was preceded by a row boat carrying two people to guard against any chance of mishap.

Charles A. Dean served as referee; Frank W. Blankley as chief judge and William G. Howe as chief timer in the marathon.

GOLF TITLE PLAY OPENS TOMORROW AT JACKSON PARK

The city golf championship, Chicago's most pretentious public park tournament, which is now a classic, will start tomorrow at Jackson park. A record field of 300 is looked for, as up to last night there had been 130 nominations, while last year the starters numbered 191. Entries will be received at the tee until 1:30 and prospective contestants are specially requested to bring their club credentials with them.

The whole of the playing time from [illegible] to 1:30 has been reserved for tournament players, and most of the early entrants already have been paired.

Thomas J. Frainey, now with the Briergate club, present champion, will have a harder field to contend against than last year. Among the entries are Russell Martin, the Cook county open champion; Ted Lloyd of Jackson, who has just been reinstated as as amateur; Eldridge Robinson, the high school star; James Fee of Evanston Community; George Hackl Jr. of Midlothian, Kenneth Hisert of Olympia, the western junior champion, and a score of others.

The Silver Tassel tournament of the North Shore golf, its annual invitation tournament, will be staged Wednesday and Thursday; the field numbering over 100.

A number of Chicago women golfers will compete in the Milwaukee three day tournament at the Blue Mound Country club, which will start tomorrow and run three days.

* *

Chicago professionals qualified at Hinsdale last week for the annual championship tournament of the Professional Golfers' association at Pittsburgh. Owing to the short notice given, the field was small. Those who qualified were Jock Hutchison, 147; Alfred Hackbarth, 147; Willie Hunter, 154; J. J. [illegible], 155; James F. Carberry, 155; Tom [illegible], 155; Phil Gaudin, 157; J. Foulis, 157.

OFF IN THE WOMEN'S RIVER MARATHON

Just after the start of the women's river marathon staged here yesterday this photo of the field of thirty-four contestants was snapped. It shows them fairly closely bunched. The race began at the Municipal pier and ended at the Wells street bridge over the Chicago river. Two persons in a row boat accompanied each swimmer to guard against mishaps.

E. H. HOOVER TURNS IN MIDLOTHIAN LOW CARD

HOLE IN ONE CLUB

DR. GEORGE W. WEBSTER, pioneer member at Flossmoor and former state health commissioner, affiliated himself with the Hole in One club yesterday by making the second hole, 175 yards, in an ace. He was playing with C. E. Faust.

Roy C. Seery, competing in the ball sweepstakes at Bob o' Link yesterday, made the eleventh hole, 197 yards, from the tee.

William J. Malony, playing recently at Lincoln park, made the fifth hole, 118 yards, with a mashie shot from the tee.

BY JOE DAVIS.

Free from the cares of the Midlothian tournament, E. Hoover Bankard is now able to concentrate on his golf game, the result being a card of 71 in the qualifying round for the club championship. This led the field by five strokes, William S. Hoyt being second with 76.

E. HOOVER BANKARD.

After reaching the turn in 38, Hoover knocked off the next three holes in par figure, and then at the thirteenth, began to move like a thoroughbred coming down the stretch. He scored four birdies in a row and, finishing with a 5 and a 4, toed the record of 33, made by Chick Evans for the incoming nine.

His fine card enabled him to perform the miracle of winning a handicap prize from scratch. His allowance was 3, and he won the W. J. Donahue trophy with a net of 69. The card was as follows:

Out ....5 3 4 5 4 3 5 4 5—38
In ....4 4 3 4 3 2 4 5 4—33—71

Other qualifiers in the championship flight were:

W. S. Hoyt, 76; Burdette Ford, 78; J. H. Johnson, 80; George Hackl Jr., 81; George H. Hartman, 81; C. W. Booth, 83; A. C. Johnson, 83.

Sweepstakes winners were:

Bankard, 71—3—68; A. C. Johnson, 83—14—69; W. S. Hoyt, 76—7—69; H. S. Mikesell, 89—20—69; J. H. Johnson, 80—10—70; Frank Barbour, 86—16—70.

Midlothian has reason to be happy. It owns its street car line, which traverses the green fields. The men never quit work except in the winter, when they are laid off for six months.

HINSDALE.

H. H. Gaines, with a card of 37, won the low gross for nine holes, F. T. Whiting getting low net of 44—11—33. Results in the first round for the Sports and Pastimes trophy were: G. Clark defeated G. Whiteside, 4 and 3; C. B. Ritchie defeated E. N. Davis, 6 and 4; H. Gains defeated S. K. Penfield, 6 and 5; F. H. Irwin won from R. G. Maxwell by default; I. B. Fry won from A. G. Dugan by default; I. N. Wright defeated F. Van Inwagen, 3 and 2; R. S. Hyney won from W. V. Brown, by default. Winners in the sweepstakes were: H. G. Skinner, H. Gains, R. S. Hyney, I. N. Wright, J. S. McGuire, S. K. Penfield, F. T. Whiting, J. C. Davis, P. E. Mason.

INDIAN HILL.

L. T. Walker won the Arrowhead cup, defeating T. W. Ritchie, 3 and 2. Leaders in the handicap against par were: L. B. Sherman, 1 up; H. R. Buts, even; A. B. Bradley, G. R. Collins, F. R. Blossom, 1 down.

CALUMET.

Winners in the blind bogey event: C. C. Cole, F. N. Browning, J. C. Rowe, J. F. Gilmore, C. L. Searcy with scores of 85. Richard O'Hara won the event against par, finishing 1 up with 71.

PARK RIDGE.

H. J. Warr led the qualifiers for the Leaf and Feather trophy with a card of 69. Qualifiers were: H. J. Warr, 69; D. J. Gallagher, 71; A. J. Bucheit, G. W. Nicholson, 72; B. J. Feipel, A. O. Young, H. Stafford, E. W. Rodermer, 73; J. E. Greenslade, W. L. Shepard, and J. B. Cleveland, 76; C. E. Carqueville, 77; E. E. Barter, 78; C. J. Moloney, W. M. Young, J. J. Fisher, 78. D. G. Gallagher won the event against par, 1 down.

WESTMORELAND.

The weekly Fellowship cup was taken by W. F. Brexmit, with 85—18—67. Sweepstakes honors were divided between F. K. Burns, 86—15—71; J. B. Westcott, 81—8—73; H. A. Rodgers, 89—15—74; W. J. O'Brien, 87—13—74. Blind bogey winners were: C. M. Case, 96—13—83 and C. W. Wrigley, 103—20—83. Results in the second round for the Angus cup: F. Burnaby defeated F. G. Rolland, 4 and 3; F. C. Stiles Jr. won from H. W. MacLean by default; C. Stewart defeated F. B. Farnsworth, 3 and 2; J. W. McCurdy won from R. G. McKay by default.

RIDGEMOOR.

Honors in the qualifying round for the Bob O'Link trophy resulted in a tie between three members, Congressman M. E. Michaelson, 82—10—72; B. B. Berntsen, 92—20—72; and A. G. McKinley, 91—19—72. Honors in the final day's play of the guest day tournament were carried off by the following:

GUESTS—W. A. Beckley, Beverly, low gross, morning; C. L. Frame, Olympic Fields, low net, morning; B. F. Webb, Edgewater, and L. Gosselein, Edgewater, low gross, afternoon; W. H. Birdsall, Skokie, low net; R. C. Williams, Chicago, low gross, 54 holes; R. E. Meyer, low net, 54 holes.

MEMBERS—F. Mayo, low gross, morning; B. B. Bernstein, low net, morning; A. W. Johnston, low gross, afternoon; S. Ropp, low net, afternoon; R. E. Williams, low gross, 54 holes; A. B. Herrick, low net, 54 holes.

ONWENTSIA.

In the match play against par honors were carried off by G. McLaughlin Jr., who had a card of 74—3—even. S. B. McKinney had 87—15—1 down, and W. J. Black finished with 81—9—2 down.

Joie Ray Wins Mile Race in Boston; Beats Connolly

Boston, Mass., Aug. 5.—Joie Ray of the Illinois A. C. easily won the Walter Scott mile race at the annual games of the Boston Caledonian club today in the slow time of 4:43 3-5. J. J. Connolly of Georgetown university and G. M. Marsters of the Boston A. A. came in second and third respectively.

On Local Golf Links

WILLIAM A. MOULTON made what an Englishman once described as a "two play" at Edgewater yesterday, topping the field in the qualifying round for the midsummer tournament, and also landing first place in the match play against par, finishing 1 up. He had a gross cord of 74, which, with his handicap of 9, netted him a 65 net. In the semi-finals of the Liberty tournament, class A, L. E. Gosselin defeated J. R. Murphy, 2 up, and J. F. Matteson defeated M. C. Beymer at the home green. Only one match was completed in class B, P. L. Tallman defeating R. A. Griefen, 1 up, and one in class C, J. P. Seeberg defeating A. J. Kasper, 2 up.

Rosecrans defeated Vic Julien, 4 and 3; Bert A. Davis defeated L. W. Brost, 1 up; Jack Pentecost defeated John Armstrong, 4 and 2; Paul Albert defeated J. J. Pallay, 5 and 4; B. Turrell defeated George Challacombe, 1 up; G. S. Thompson defeated C. R. Newhouse, 1 up. Semi-finalists for the Directors' cup—E. F. Seney vs. C. R. Newhouse and Bert A. Davis vs. Jack Pentecost.

OAK PARK.

G. Alexander, 93—19—74, and J. Meier, 91—19—72, had a combined low net score of 146, which won the prize in the tandem team event. In the sweepstakes competition, G. C. Edwards annexed first prize with 81.

LA GRANGE.

President Cyrus L. Garnett corralled forty of his trusty clan and pitted them against Vice President W. H. Pruden in the annual team tilt. Despite a fine round of 38—37—75 by H. W. Walker of the President's squad, the latter met defeat, scoring only 16 points against the Pruden's 19. The Garnetts signed the dinner tabs.

SOUTH SHORE.

Close matches featured the first round for the President's trophy, as follows: C. P. Thompson defeated J. J. Killackey, 1 up; W. J. Rowe defeated H. J. Wanner, 3 up; W. Homer Hartz defeated S. M. O'Donnell, 4 and 2; G. P. Miller defated M. P. Fitzmaurice, 1 up; Reginald Cooke defeated F. M. Welch, 1 up; A. Eilersgaars won by default from F. Brigham; J. F. Sheehy defeated C. C. Spade, 1 up; J. F. Chelius defeated Eustace Vynne, 2 and 1. In the sweepstakes event, eighteen holes, medal play, one-half handicap allowance, the winners were A. R. Camp, 79—6—73; J. P. Kieley, 82—6—76; Eustace Vynne, 80—4—76, and R. J. Watt, 83—7—76.

SKOKIE.

Most of the first round matches in the club championship and officers' cup competition were decided yesterday. Results in leading flights: Championship—A. C. Mills won by default from William Sutherland; F. A. Wilmarth defeated S. L. Williams, 4 and 3; C. W. McGuire defeated C. E. Claque, 1 up. Second—I. McCurdy defeated George Ristine, 1 up; E. C. Divine defeated R. L. Davis, 3 and 2; M. C. Schultz defeated L. Barnett, 6 and 5. Third—M. L. Patterson defeated L. M. Allen, 2 and 1; C. A. Eldridge defeated J. A. Fulton, 1 up; W. A. Levering won by default from A. C. Jones; J. Henry won by default from A. J. Mitchell.

RAVISLOE.

Blind bogey shooters did some occult guessing yesterday. J. Rosenthal, J. Wollenberger, and W. Nusbaum tying at 89, the mystic figure. Others missing one stroke were C. Lederer, T. Rubovits, G. Neuman, D. Witkowsky, and S. Morganthau, 88.

MAYWOOD.

At the end of the first eighteen of the fifty-four holes for the Directors' cup, R. J. Schmidt, with 85—17—68, led J. Lamkin, 87—18—69, by one stroke.

GLEN VIEW.

Winners in the Class handicap competition were: A—J. W. Carey, 82—9—73. B—C. F. Thompson, 84—14—70. C—H. E. Byram, 91—24—67.

WESTWARD HO.

H. B. Foster, M. A. Evans and G. C. Guston tied at 70 in the event against par. Winners in the ball sweepstakes were: Class A—T. Meade, H. D. Sayre, H. D. Foster, M. A. Evans, 70. Class B—H. E. Luff, D. B. Kenney, F. D. Schwartz, G. C. Guston, G. J. Kemmler, 70. Class C—R. C. Coombs, M. N. Norton, K. O. Basse, 70.

HILDA SHATTERS RECORD TO WIN U. S. SWIM RACE

New York, Aug. 5.—Miss Hilda James, 17 year old European swimming champion, broke one world's record and shattered one American record today in winning a 300 meter race and defeating Miss Alieen Riggin and Miss Ethel McGary, both of New York. Miss James swam the 300 meters in 4:33 4-5 clipping one-fifth of a second from the mark set by Miss Ethelda Bleibtrey. She took the lead at the fifty yard mark and finished 8 feet ahead of Miss Riggin, who was one foot in front of Miss McGary.

The English girl also set a new American record, reaching the 300 yard mark in 4:08 4-5.

RIVER FOREST IN WIN OVER GARY IN CITY TENNIS

Sweeping every match by decisive scores, the crack River Forest team added Gary to its list of victims, 9 to 0, in the division B south section play of the Chicago Tennis association's interclub tournament at the loser's courts yesterday. By its victory over Gary River Forest now has met and defeated all six of the clubs in the section without losing a match. By an identical score in the same division South Park buried Hawthorne, 9 to 0, only one match being carried into an extra set.

Edison racketeers journeyed to the West Maywood club and emerged with a slim 5 to 4 verdict in the division B north class. Kupshas of Edison and Coons of Maywood came through with victories in their singles brushes, and paired with Heitman and Haynes, respectively, delivered victories in the doubles. Summaries:

SUZANNE'S COMING OVER NEXT YEAR TO "SHOW UP" MOLLA

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Allan S. Muhr, captain of the French Davis cup team, here today, declared that Suzanne Lenglen would return to the United States next year. Capt. Muhr said that Suzanne has declared she is both willing and anxious to return to America to meet Molla and wipe out the unfavorable impression created by her default in the championships at Forest Hills a year ago.

Last year Suzanne arrived but a few days before the American women's championships got under way, and as a result was not thoroughly acclimated when thrown against the American title holder. Capt. Muhr declares that next year she will arrange sailing details so that she will be in this country several weeks before the United States women's championship.

St. Louis Player Wins Interstate Net Title

Sioux City, Ia., Aug. 5.—Wray Brown of St. Louis won the singles championship in the Interstate Tennis tournament here this afternoon from John Barton of Sioux Falls, in straight sets, 6—2, 6—3, 6—0.

MOLLA DEFEATS MISS BANCROFT IN TROPHY FINAL

Seabright, N. J., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Only a miracle can defeat Mrs. Molla Mallory in American women's tennis this season, and Miss Leslie Bancroft of Longwood, as a purveyor of miracles, was a failure here this afternoon. The national champion beat the Boston girl easily in straight sets, 6—2, 6—2, and thus earned her second leg in two years on the Seabright bowl for women's singles.

MOLLA MALLORY.

Miss Bancroft's opposition to Mrs. Mallory was less severe than in last week's New York championship at the Green Meadow club, where the champion beat the Boston star in the semi-finals, 8-6, 6-2. Today Mrs. Mallory fairly overwhelmed her opponent, being her usual steady self at the base line and making never a mistake in either set on any ball that was returnable. Moreover, her control was of the best.

A stirring four set encounter which ended in victory for R. Norris Williams and Watson M. Washburn over William M. Johnston and James O. Anderson, 8—10, 8—6, 9—7, 6—3, marked the closing of the Seabright tournament. Johnston always was the most aggressive player. His volleys, smashes, and cross court drives were a sensation. Anderson was in poor form, repeatedly driving into the net and out after Johnston had made brilliant placements.

Work Begins on Lincoln Highway Ideal Section

Model Road Near Chicago to Cost $100,000 a Mile.

THE stretch of model road known as the "ideal section" of the Lincoln highway is, after nearly two years of preliminary research, now under construction in Lake county, Ind.

Contracts for the construction were closed recently in Indianapolis when Stone & Webster of Boston, Mass., acting as agents for the association, undertook to build a section of road which will cost, with all appurtenances, approximately $100,000 a mile, at a price of $33,000 a mile to the state of Indiana. Already the work on this stretch is under way.

In addition to the $33,000 a mile provided by the state, Lake county authorities have assured $25,000 from the county funds. The extra expense of the section beyond the sum supplied by the state and county will be met by the Lincoln Highway association through a special fund provided by the United States Rubber company. It is expected that the paving work will be completed by the end of October, many details, including the lighting, installation, and the beautification of the right of way, remaining for accomplishment next spring.

The design calling for forty feet of ten inch reinforced concrete pavement capable of carrying a traffic of 20,000 vehicles each twenty-four hour day, one-quarter of which are estimated to be heavily laden trucks, impresses the necessity of permanency in modern highway investments on main routes of travel. The width makes for safety and facility of operation. The absence of drainage ditches at the side of the road further inculcates the safety idea, while the night illumination increases the road's efficiency by permitting a heavy volume of night traffic without danger, according to engineering experts. The beautification of the roadside is in line with steps now being taken by the most advanced highway departments.

While it is not expected that many states can undertake, in the near future, improvements embodying all of the principal elements of the "ideal section" design, it is believed by the Lincoln Highway association that the design will be suggestive and will tend to bring to the attention of the American public the necessity of adequacy in present day specifications, if the hundreds of millions which are now going into highway construction are to properly serve the America of today and tomorrow.

The Tribune will pay $5 cash for auto questions which are accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send in your name and address with your question to "The Inquiring Reporter, Chicago Tribune." No question will be returned. For today's question Miss Charlotte Van Pelt, 4829 Dorchester avenue, Chicago, was awarded $5.

The Question.

Would one way traffic streets solve the loop congestion problem?

The Answers.

D. O'Connor, 612 Michigan avenue, Evanston, student—From my experience in the loop this week, one way streets would do much toward solving the problem. We made better time with the emergency one way traffic streets than we did before. In addition, some signal system should be installed, so cars could move forward, five blocks, say, without stopping.

Sam Dessent, 2910 Wentworth avenue, taxi driver—This emergency one way street system is one of the best things we ever had, but they should sure educate those "Sunday" drivers as to what it means. Heavy traffic should keep to the right, letting fast traffic have a straightaway on the left. Cars going to swing out should keep close to that particular side, avoiding blockades and accidents.

Mrs. E. M. Giles, 722 Roscoe street—My experience while driving in the loop during this strike makes me think that one way streets would surely be a good thing, and a subway, if we had it, a better thing. The one way street system has worked so well this week that we ought to perfect the system and give it a thorough test.

Casper Brauer, Lincoln park concessionaire—I find that I get through the loop faster now than I did before the strike. There were certainly more autos running around during the strike than there were previously, so it is not likely to be any more crowded when the street cars get back to work. Undoubtedly, all traffic, including street cars, should be operated on one way streets.

Frank L. Mucklow, 930 Edgecomb place, salesman—I am in favor of one way traffic—north and south, east and west. With the way traffic is handled now, it is a whole lot easier to get through the loop. Street car routings should be arranged to conform to this new arrangement. Something good may come out of this strike yet.

Gossip of the Auto Trade

THE beauty sextet, collected by Edwards & Crist, Chicago Auburn distributors, as a spectacular feature of the Pageant of Progress exposition, added a gala note to the car strike situation during the week. The girls, winners over 1,200 candidates, spent six hours a day piloting their Auburn show car through congested streets and distributing auburn hued carnations as marks of favor on auburn haired men who struck their fancy. They visited every section of the city.

Midseason models, snappy developments of the sport touring and light closed lines, are making their appearance almost daily along the row. At the height of the greatest selling year in history clever manufacturers have succeeded in holding and increasing public interest through a series of improvements and refinements which compare favorably with the new lines introduced at the last national shows.

Among the fall models newly on display are complete lines of Buick cars, including new touring sedans; a dashing stranger, called "Chesterfield Special," from the Cleveland plant, and a new Supersix Hudson sedan of longer body design and aluminum construction, priced at $2,295. Eugene Silver, Chicago Cole distributor, has received advance announcement of a new and finer Cole "Eight-Ninety." This model is expected in Chicago in the near future.

The La Fayette Motors corporation of Mars Hill, Indianapolis, will transfer its operations to Milwaukee Jan. 1, according to announcement made last week by C. W. Nash, president. The move will be made in order to bring La Fayette into closer association with the Nash group of industries, of which it is financially a unit.

Among the most recent price reduction announcements was the cut which shears from $150 to $200 from all Nash six cylinder models and $50 to $100 from the four cylinder jobs.

Traffic Lessons Burned Into City by Strike Brands

Millions Get Acquainted and Demand Action on Subway.

BY J. L. JENKINS.

CHICAGO'S motor rescue last week proved to be at once the most spectacular and successful demonstration of modern automobile service ever made in the United States. It proved conclusively that today's motor equipment, incomplete as it is, can be mobilized overnight to care for every important phase of transportation in a community.

Statisticians have been busy for several years estimating motor transport possibilities. During the threatened railroad tieup they announced that the passenger cars and trucks in actual service in the country at that time could easily take care of all vital movements of food and the necessary passenger movements over an extended period. They declared that for a week motors could keep national industry moving, too, and serve the country with a minimum of delay and inconvenience.

Other experts announced that there are sufficient motor vehicles registered in every state to move the entire population to a point outside of its borders in a single day. In England it was demonstrated that motors could move both the necessary supply of food and the necessary passenger traffic during the rail strike which stopped all train service into London. But it remained for Chicago's motor army to develop between midnight and the morning whistles mobile fleets big enough and fast enough to serve both the normal traffic and more than 2,000,000 extra people who depend on electric lines as their sole means of local transportation.

After the first day of experimenting with the enormous traffic which brought 200,000 vehicles into the restricted business area and kept them milling in and out of the loop all day, motorized Chicago found itself, adopted a new and faster schedule, and carried its burden safely and on the dot of time through both the rush hours and normal travel periods. The strike tragedy became a more or less pleasing adventure. City people forgot their habitual isolation and got acquainted. The problem of getting to work on time and returning home changed from a disagreeable duty to a game in which good fellowship played the leading rôle. The crowds became human and smiled at hardships.

On the other hand, the situation forced Chicago traffic needs to the front and illustrated the economy and efficiency of automobiles as nothing else has been able to do. It was found that, by eliminating street cars from the loop, vehicular traffic 30 to 50 per cent above normal can be speeded up 100 per cent by alternating the traffic through one-way streets; that one of the chief difficulties of the traffic scheme lies in keeping the cars moving steadily in Michigan avenue; and that the average small car can be operated twenty miles a day through city traffic at a cost of about 24 cents per capita when four people are served to each small car.

Briefly, transportation experts found that the subway and its consequent elimination of loop surface cars, is the primary need; that traffic towers high enough to allow central control of traffic in Michigan avenue from the link bridge to Roosevelt road is the second demand; and that motor transportation can carry the load in Chicago at a cost but a little greater than that of common electric carriers.

Chief Fitzmorris of the police department, a student of traffic needs, and the engineers and officials who for years have worked for traffic improvement, were astonished at the practical working out of the one-way traffic scheme which has been impossible in the days of street car operation. They agreed after systematic surveys of the strike traffic that in the loop itself it will hardly be possible to improve on the work done by traffic officers and that, until the subway brings relief, little change can be made in the business section system.

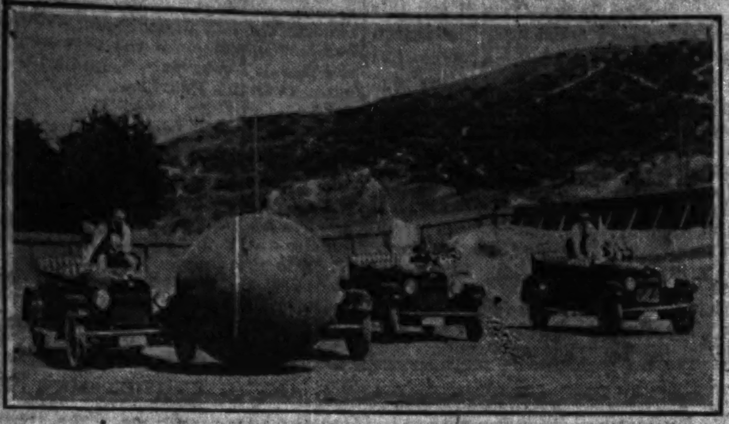
"No matter what routing changes are made," declared Capt. Patrick Lavan, in charge of traffic, "the human element must direct vehicles through the loop. Towers on streets other than the main boulevards, will not work out. I do not think that automatic control of boulevard traffic will work out either. The situation here makes it necessary to direct traffic at intersections in order to keep converging streams moving as fast as possible. This can be done only by officers at the spot."

Maj. R. F. Kelker, city traffic expert, pointed to the one-way street system as an example of what can be done when the long needed subway is constructed, and made detailed reports to be submitted to the council transportation committee.

Chief Fitzmorris was credited with having met the traffic emergency swiftly and efficiently. He received telegrams and letters of congratulation from cities all over the country.

An interesting angle lay in the working out of motor transport costs by a number of drivers. They found that the average daily cost of operating a small car twenty miles through strike traffic amounted to 2 cents a day for each of four people. This cost included one and one-half gallons of gasoline, one-quart of oil, and a depreciation estimate on the car of 32 cents a day. The commuters estimated that traffic amounted to 24 cents a day for men can buy a new, popular priced touring car, dividing the cost over the period of a year.

ANOTHER THRILL



Pushball, engineered on foot, is deadly enough, as any number of thousands of college men can testify. But it remained for the Buick factory to introduce a double thrill to the game. Here is the start of a recent battle in which eight cars were entered. Windshields and tops were removed and each team adopted a distinctive flag to designate them while in action. The object was to butt the ball over the opponents' goal line. The game was completed without casualties.

WORK-BENCH WISDOM

BY PETER SAMPSON.

Are you thoroughly acquainted with your electrical system, your generator, timer, lights—the essential nerves of the automobile? Few know even a little about this phase of their Gasoline Alley life, and in consequence the most irritating troubles usually develop there.

Peter Sampson, president of the Sampson Electric company, a specialist and head of an organization of ignition and electrical specialists in Chicago, has found the motoring public woefully ignorant on this subject. He will write of electrical essentials each week hereafter and, through The Tribune, will answer any question you care to ask concerning your particular troubles. Address your questions to "Motordom," Chicago Tribune, Chicago, Ill., and watch for the answers.

ONE of the most common causes of trouble in the electrical system on the car of today, and the one most easily avoided, is the corroded battery terminal. This corrosion forms on the battery at the positive terminal only, and it shows itself in two different forms.

One form is a hard brown crust which gathers between the surfaces of the terminal on the starting motor cable and the lug on the battery, which crust eventually becomes thick enough to completely insulate these terminals one from the other.

When the electrolyte from the battery slops over and is given the opportunity of working on the positive terminal there is formed, in addition to this brown crust, a green jellylike scum that appears to be oozing out from between the surfaces of the terminals. This also acts as an insulator.

If this corrision is not removed trouble in the electrical system is bound to develop. The corrosion isolates the battery from the generator and starting motor and prevents the starting motor from cranking the engine, and in a good many cases is the cause of the generator burning out.

The starting motor requires a heavy supply of current in order to crank the engine, and the barrier built up between the battery and the starting motor by corrosion is such as to prevent the requisite amount of current from being delivered to the motor (when the starting switch is closed to complete the circuit), consequently causing its failure to crank the engine.

On the other hand, this corrosion will also prevent the flow of electrical current manufactured by the generator to the battery. The current on meeting this obstacle backs up into the generator and is transformed into heat. If the condition is not remedied the generator will become so hot as to break down the insulation on the armature and fields, resulting in a burnt out unit.

To prevent any possibility of this trouble the cable terminals and the battery lugs should be inspected frequently, should be cleaned thoroughly, and well covered with a coating of vaseline. This simple remedy, if followed out, can be made to save a good many car owners a great deal of annoyance and expense.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Q.—What causes the lights to flare up very bright when speeding up a motor? R. L. L.

A.—A loose connection somewhere between the battery and the point where the light and generator taps are taken off, which is generally at the ammeter. The battery acts as an equalizer for the generator voltage, and if there is a poor connection, the generator voltage tends to rise unduly and this voltage is impressed on the light circuits.

Q.—The generator on my Lexington car stopped charging a few days ago, and I notice that when I close the cutout contacts, it began to charge and would charge all right for a few hours, and then quit again. By closing the cutout again, it would again begin to charge. I laid the trouble to the cutout and bought a new cutout and put it on, but it acted the same way. Can there be trouble in the generator? M. S.

A.—Yes. A poor armature connection, or oil soaked brushes will cause the trouble you describe. Trouble of this kind is very seldom in the cutout.

Q.—How often should the bearings on a generator be oiled? Is thin oil the best to use? T. R. N.

A.—Generally speaking, about every 500 miles for ball bearings. Bronze bearings require oiling oftener, say about every 300 miles. Thin oil will not serve as well as an oil that has a little body to it, and will "stay put." Thin oil runs through in a short time. Your ordinary engine oil should be all right to use on the generator.

Q.—My engine seems to hit all right at low speeds, but when I speed the motor up, it misses. The missing seems to be not on any one cylinder particularly, but seems to skip from one cylinder to another. What would this indicate? P. D.

A.—You neglected to state whether you have magneto or battery ignition. We presume you have battery ignition, as this is a more common trouble on battery ignition, and is usually due to a weak spark coil.

Q.—My starter seems very sluggish at times and I notice that when I step on the starting switch, my lights almost go out. Would this indicate trouble in my starter? R. McV.

A.—Possibly. There may be a ground or short circuit in your starting motor, in which case it had better be looked after by an expert. We think the trouble is more apt to be a loose or corroded terminal in the battery. A weak battery would also indicate itself in this way.

Q.—Would too early timing of the ignition cause a motor to heat? B. C.

A.—No. Too late timing would cause overheating of the motor.

Detroit Relays Rumor of Ford-Wills Merger

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 5.—[Special.]—The rumor is persistent in automobile circles that Henry Ford is endeavoring not only to add C. Harold Wills to his organization, but also to possess himself of the Wills-Sainte Claire motor plant at Marysville.

A conference was recently held on Mr. Ford's yacht at which several Ford officials were present. A stop was made at Marysville and Mr. Wills and John R. Lee, closely associated with Mr. Wills, were taken aboard. Later, it is stated, Mr. Wills made a thorough inspection of the Lincoln motors plant.

Wills is one of the master minds of the automobile industry and took an active part in the development of the Ford car and plant. His loss was keenly felt by Ford.

Wills has answered the rumor by pointing to the strong financial position of his own plant, but has not directly denied the merger rumor.

STATE HOSPITALITY

BEFORE undertaking tours which will take motorists through several states it will be well for the travelers to familiarize themselves with the laws governing the recognition of licenses in the states to be visited. These laws are quite varied, and while some of the states grant reciprocity, others limit the time which visiting motorists may stay without procuring a new license.

The states granting reciprocity are:

Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Delaware, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Montana, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The length of time allowed in other states is as follows:

Arizona, six months; California, three months; Colorado, ninety days; Florida, thirty days; Georgia, thirty days; Illinois, sixty days; Indiana, sixty days; Kansas, thirty days; Maine, thirty days; Michigan, ninety days; Minnesota, thirty days; Mississippi, sixty days; Nebraska, thirty days; Nevada, thirty days; New Hampshire, twenty days; New Jersey, fifteen days; New Mexico, sixty days; North Carolina, sixty days; Oregon, thirty days; Rhode Island, ten days; South Carolina, thirty days; Tennessee, thirty days; Utah, thirty days; Virginia, fourteen days; Washington, ninety days, and Wyoming, ninety days.

French Classic Falls to Tiny Fiat Racing Car

IN the French grand prize race, which was held on July 15 at Strasburg in Alsace, Felice Nazzaro drove his six cylinder Fiat car to victory, beating nineteen competitors—eleven French, five English, and three Italians.

The race covered the distance of 802 kilometers (approximately 500 miles), which the Fiat completed in 6 hours and 17 minutes, at the average speed of 126 kilometers an hour (approximately seventy-six miles an hour).

The rain of the previous days made the course very slippery and dangerous to the contenders.

The Fiat team besides Felice Nazzaro, the winner, consisted of Pietro Bordino and Biaggio Nazzaro. These cars were equipped with the smallest motors yet produced.

BEG YOUR PARDON

Officials of the Lincoln Highway association in Iowa have brought to THE TRIBUNE'S attention a typographical error in the national highway map showing the progress of paving on national highways, printed in the Coloroto magazine on Sunday, July 23, which fails to show the short paved and longer graveled sections of the Lincoln highway between Ames, Ia., and Omaha.

Nearly ninety miles of this road are graveled through Story, Green, Boone and Carrol counties and there are four short stretches of concrete leading into the principal cities. It was impossible to show short paved sections of any road on the map, which was drawn to a scale of 200 miles to an inch.

A New Record.

Automotive Industries will say this week: "There is a substantial reason to believe that production of passenger cars and trucks for June exceeds 250,000. A preliminary survey of the shipping figures for the first three weeks of the month indicates that the total will be larger than in May, when it reached 256,000. It is almost certain to be as large. Output for the second quarter will therefore approximate 725,000. Buying of passenger cars in the farm districts, up to this time, has been chiefly by business and professional men. The real farm market has not yet opened and when this agricultural buying gets under way it may do much to hold up the volume of business. July is certain to be a big month, although production will be smaller than in June because several companies will close the first half of the month for inventory, and all were down over the Fourth of July."

Inspect Spark Plugs.

It is a good rule for a motorist to check up on his spark plug points occasionally. The intense heat causes them to burn off and have too wide a gap for the spark to "jump." This, quite often, is the cause of irregular firing. If one will throttle his motor at low speed, he may tell generally if it is firing in all cylinders. Misfiring is more noticeable at low speed.

DURANT

The Procession of Progress with Durant at the head in the qualities most sought by motorists:

DURABILITY POWER
DEPENDABILITY ECONOMY
COMFORT RESPONSIVENESS

Durant Six Touring is in the highest sense a car for all around use—a car alert, powerful, with riding comfort to a superlative degree.

Its independent units result in great ease of adjustment. Every part is instantly accessible.

Its Ansted-designed motor delivers a steady flow of power, full responsive, and sensitive to control. This quality proves of special value in crowded city streets, and in emergencies on the road. The Tubular Backbone construction (patented) insures rigidity of the frame and freedom from racking, with its consequent squeaks and rattles.

Visitors to Chicago will find this an opportune time for a demonstration of Durant's qualities of easy control in heavy traffic. See the Durant at the Pageant of Progress.

Ocean of Oil to Settle Dust on Downstate Roads

35,000,000 Gals. Bought to Be Distributed Among Counties.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 5.—[By the Associated Press.]—Illinois dirt roads, some deep in dust, are going to get an oil bath such as never before attempted in the state. More than 35,000,000 gallons of oil will be used on these highways this year, according to the present program.

The oil is bought and inspected by the state and distributed to the various counties. The inspection of this great quantity of oil has come to be a formidable problem to the state bureau of tests. Eight inspectors already have been stationed at refineries and others may be assigned before the season is over. The cost of maintaining men at the plants prohibits placing inspectors at all refineries, it is said, although it is the announced intention of the highway department to make plant inspection wherever the quantity to be inspected justifies the expense. In the case of plants shipping small amounts the tests will be made in the laboratory of the department.

One company at Wood River, Ill., is now shipping some 300,000 gallons daily of oil for use on the roads of Illinois, the largest day's shipment to date being seventy cars. This company will supply approximately 16,000,000 gallons during the season, another company 5,000,000, and five others will furnish several million gallons each.

Practically all the counties are specifying oil with a higher percentage of solid residue than in the past, the demand now being for oil containing from 50 to 60 per cent solid residue, whereas 40 to 50 per cent has been common in the past.

In respect to this heavier percentage of solid residue, the department warns that it is necessary to have equipment for heating the oil before spreading it and the road surface must be free from dust and in the best condition for oiling. If these precautions are followed, says the department, more satisfactory results with the oil of high residue percentage will be obtained.

New Race Chief.

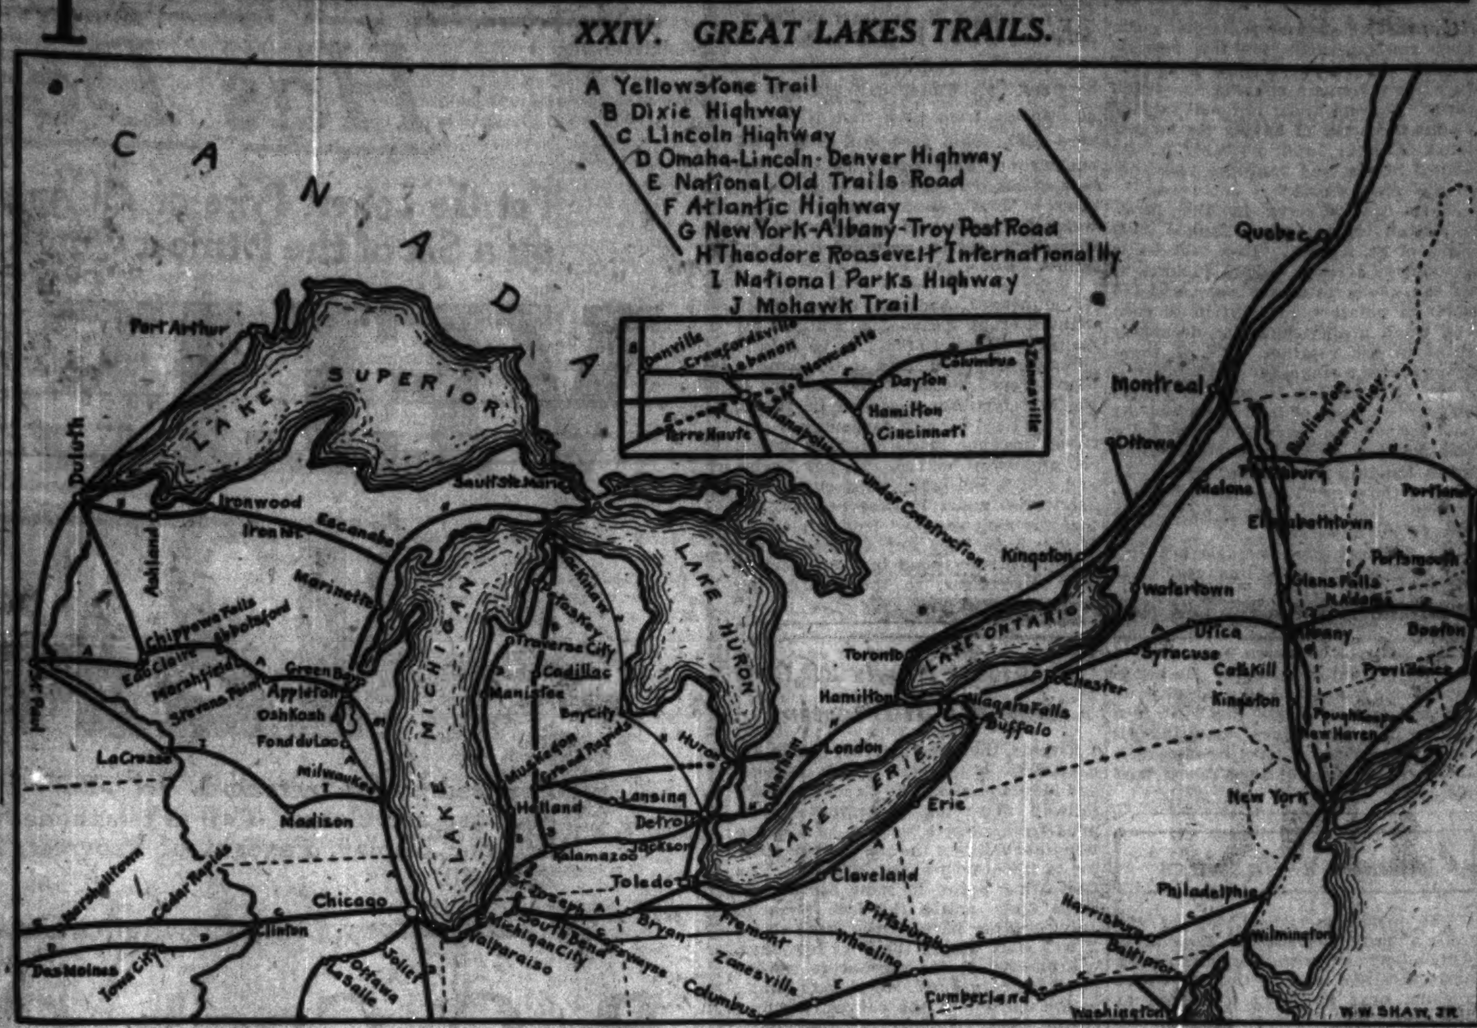
F. A. Croselmire, vice chairman of the A. A. A. contest board which has charge of A. A. A. racing in the United States, has been appointed acting chairman of that board and will handle all matters pertaining to racing for the present.

William Schimpf, the chairman of the board, has been forced to relinquish his duties for the present, because of ill health and is now in the Adirondack mountains.

With the fall racing season just ahead, the contest board has a great deal of work to do, and it was necessary to name an acting chairman to take charge.

TRIBUNE TOURS

XXIV. GREAT LAKES TRAILS.



ENCHANTMENT lies along ten thousand miles of winding roads which this season have brought all the wonders of the great lakes territory within easy striking distance of the nation's motor army.

Development of these lake shore trails has progressed by leaps and bounds, thanks to the realization of their true value by state governments. Most of them have been improved within the last three years, and few sections have to date failed to more than pay for the cost of improvement through tourist revenue alone. As transportation lines they are rivaling the railroads and lake shipping in both freight and passenger tonnage.

The above map shows that many of the most important transcontinental highways have been routed to cover as much lake shore mileage as possible. Notable among them is the Yellowstone trail, joining Lake Michigan's shore at Milwaukee and forming a path around Lake Erie to the east. The Dixie, Lincoln, Roosevelt, and other famous roads are also included in the waterways network.

All of the highways shown by heavy black lines on the map are either fully paved or improved with gravel and grading along their entire length now, and are safe for all tourist travel. Through the east the New York-Montreal route, beginning with the famous Albany Post road and running straight north through the Adirondacks, is one of the most popular tourist roads in the country. Most of the eastern roads are improved with macadam, brick, or stone, while the middle west lines shown offer concrete or gravel to the tourist.

The insert shows how best to use the southern route to New York at present. Because of construction work along the old National road east of Indianapolis routing agencies are recommending the graveled state roads leading east from Crawfordsville through Lebanon to Newcastle and south to the National road at Dublin.

Line Them Up.

Many motorists completely wear out the front tires on their cars before they find that the wheels do not run parallel. In the ordinary car front wheels are toed in 3-16 to 3-8 of an inch to take care of their spread under power.

In the opinion of Miller tire men, failure to properly align the wheels is responsible for the premature scrapping of tens of thousands of tires. Wheels of new cars require less toeing in than the wheels of cars already limbered up.

Motor Exports Increase.

Exports of American made automobiles and motor trucks during the present year are expected, and undoubtedly will, show a substantial increase over that of 1921.

American passenger cars exported in 1921 number 26,592, equal to 1.75 per cent of 1,514,000 total product. Trucks export numbered 7,480, or 4.85 per cent, of 154,550 produced.

Estimates based on the first six months of 1922 show nearly 60,000 passenger cars and 12,000 trucks will be exported this year.

"Anti-Knock" Liquid.

General Motors research corporation has in production what is styled an "anti-knock" liquid for treating gasoline.

According to Thomas Midgely Jr., company engineer, the liquid will prevent "gas knock" in any engine. The Dayton laboratories, it is stated, are producing one-half a gallon of the liquid a day, which is sufficient to "dope" 5,000 gallons of gasoline.

Although marketing plans have not been announced, it is said that the liquid may be sold at $50 a gallon.

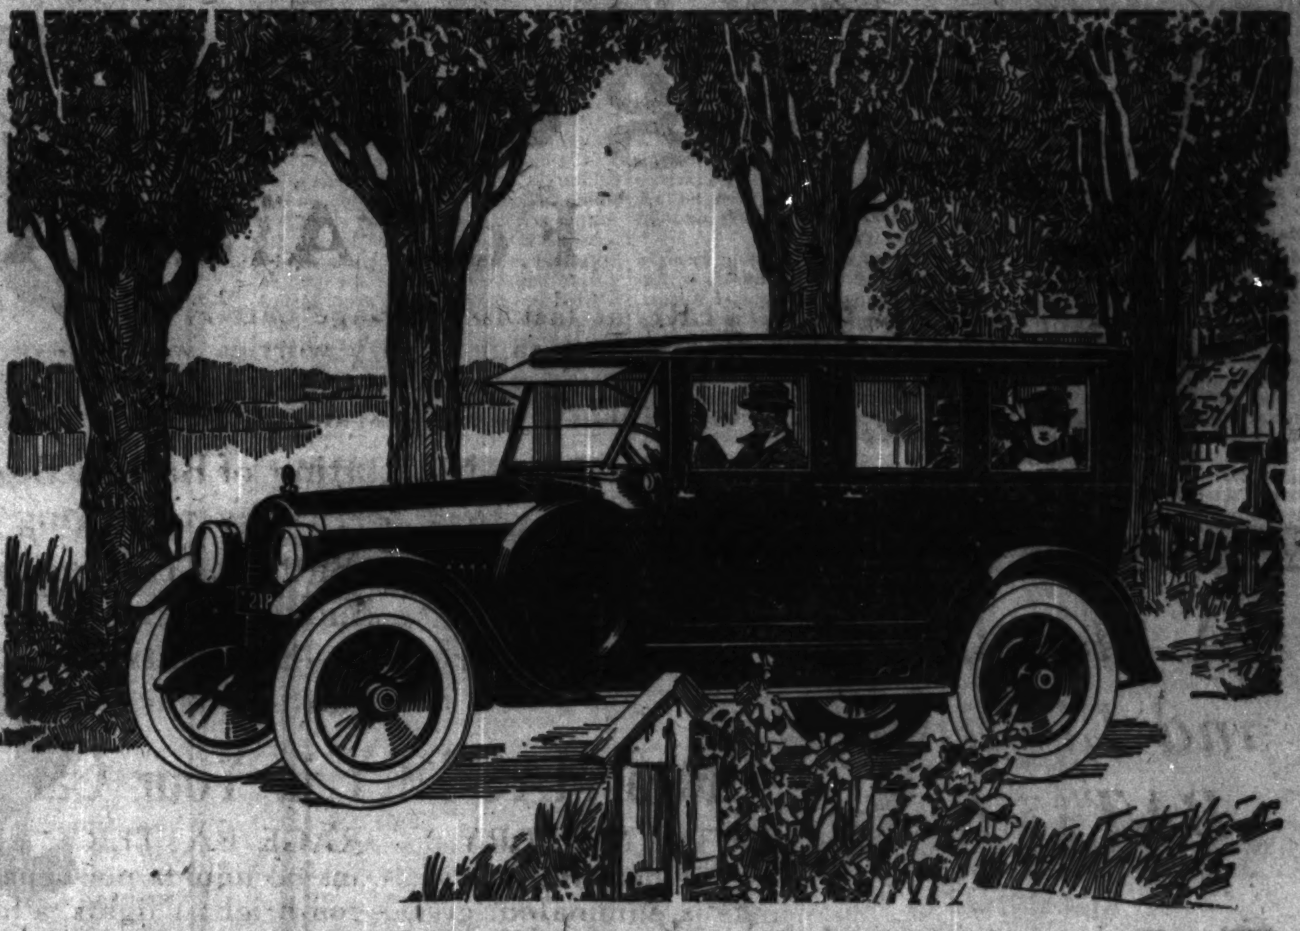
HUDSON



MOST BEAUTIFUL OF THE HUDSONS

The New Sedan is Here

The De Luxe Car of the Year $2295

It excels even those beautiful Hudsons which were counted matchless values at above $4,000—the Limousines, Town Cars and Landaulets, famed for their distinction.

No other Hudson so completely sums the body-builder's art. It blends richness and luxury with a simplicity that is the hallmark of Hudson enclosed car charm. And the promise of its beauty is borne out in the unusual personal comfort and serviceability this model affords.

It seats seven amply. The lustrous, lasting finish reveals the unhurried and painstaking care given every detail by master workmen, who have always specialized on the finest, costliest cars.

Of course it has the new Hudson motor, which won such instantaneous admiration everywhere. It is the top step of seven years' development of the patented Super-Six principle. It is equally a revelation to Hudson owners.

FARM AND GARDEN

Taking the Sting Out of the Honey Bee's Reputation

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

ENOUGH nectar goes to waste every summer in fields and vacant lots in and around Chicago to produce thousands of pounds of high grade honey. "No doubt many more Chicago suburbanites would have apiaries if they knew bees could be as easily handled as chickens," says George Herrick, owner of 130 stands of bees on the old Calumet golf links at 100th street east of Cottage Grove avenue.

Fear of the bee's stinger is one of the chief reasons that more people do not go into the business of producing honey. If they would get away from the idea that bees are treacherous and dangerous and knew there are gentle bees easily handled, especially during the summer season when they are busy, there would be many more interested, is Mr. Herrick's opinion. He laughs at the idea that bees are dangerous; he seldom uses a bee veil or smoker during the summer.

It's His Avocation.

Mr. Herrick spends nine hours every day in the stockrooms of the Pullman car shops, and takes care of his apiary as a side line. He began four years ago with twenty-five colonies of Italian bees, shipped here in three pound packages from an Alabama apiary.

Last season he extracted 7,500 pounds of honey produced by eighty-five colonies. Some of his colonies produced 200 pounds, the average 100 pounds. The June drought this year gave the sweet clover blossoms a setback in the Calumet district, and will probably cut his yield of honey down to an average of seventy-five pounds to the colony.

The entire crop is sold each year to employés of the Pullman Car works and to Mr. Herrick's friends. In 1921 he was paid more than $2,000 for the time spent in his apiary after working hours. The entire cost of his equipment, including a big roomy extracting house, a centrifugal extracting machine, and 300 supers fully equipped with frames and tops, was only $2,500.

With almost an unlimited source of nectar in nearby fields, Mr. Herrick says that there is plenty of room for more beekeepers in the Calumet region.

"Don't leave out the fact that there is plenty of work to be done during the busy season," he added. "But there is money to be made at this business for the man who is willing to work during the hours he is off duty. There are plenty of vacant lots and farmers' fields that may be used by beekeepers around the city. In many cases the ground may be leased for a small percentage of the honey crop. Visiting the apiary once a week during the summer is all the time that is needed to take care of the bees, and from October to April no attention is needed if the bees are properly packed and supplied with winter store."

May Best Time to Begin.

The ideal time to start with bees in the Calumet district and other sections around Chicago is the first of May, according to this expert. The rainy weather interferes if bees are brought here from the south earlier than this. If they arrive much later they are not able to raise their broods in time to gather nectar during the early flow.

Mr. Herrick, a charter member of the Cook County Beekeepers' association, begins extracting his honey the latter part of August, when the white clover season ends.

WHO SAID HONEY BEES WOULD STING?—George Herrick, 645 East 111th street, is shown here in his apiary on the old Calumet golf links, proving that there is less danger in handling Italian bees than there is in caring for an ill tempered sitting hen. The peculiar shaped combs in the super, where frames have been left out, furnish winding stairs for the bees to climb. Mr. Herrick usually keeps his smoker and bee veil handy, but seldom uses them except when the bees are idle in the fall and early winter.

Central States Fair Swamped with Entries

Ever since last Monday—the closing date for live stock entries at the Central States Fair and Exposition at Aurora, officials have been swamped with mail. Pure bred stock is listed from all sections of the United States and Canada, to compete for honors at the mid-west farmers' first big show.

Clifford R. Trimble, secretary, announced yesterday that, while the board agreed to enter everything postmarked before midnight of July 31, the usual leniency would be extended in taking entries if received in time to be handled properly before the show opens —Aug. 18. "But present indications are that we might have to enforce that closing time rigidly, for lack of pen room, although we are building more quarters as fast as we can get carpenters," said the secretary.

There will be more than 1,500 head of hogs, approximately 1,000 dairy and beef cattle, and a good lot of horses entered in the first show. Executives who have made a careful study of the entries say that the class of live stock to be exhibited will be on a par with the International at Chicago, which they feel is quite a record for the first year. Classes in the poultry and pet stock division are full.

Some farmers are planning to make a tour of the three big affairs in Illinois this summer; starting at Aurora, going from there to the Cook county fair, and then on to the state fair at Springfield in September. This is the plan of a group of Lake county farmers, according to J. G. Wirtz, secretary of the Lake county agricultural board.

States from which live stock entries have been received include Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Mississippi, Kentucky, Maine, New York, Michigan, Missouri, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Nebraska, Arkansas, South Carolina, and Texas, beside entrie from Canada.

POULTRY TIPS

Not many amateur poultry keepers realize the close relation between the condition of the litter in the fowl's quarters and the health of the birds. Poultry specialists at the Iowa station say that unwholesome litter has been known to cause the death of hens, and they recommend covering the floor with finely cut alfalfa or clover.

Egg laying contests have proved an effective means of increasing the egg production records of Missouri hens, raising the average May record from 13.5 in 1918 to 16.7 this year.

Every poultryman, whether he lives in the city or country, should write to his state agricultural college and ask for a free bulletin on the culling of poultry. He should be thoroughly familiar with the various points in culling before the season opens this fall.

T. S. Townsley, poultry culling specialist at the College of Agriculture, University of Missouri, says that since pullet culling is based upon estimates of the future production, while hen culling is based upon characteristics which indicate past production, pullet culling is not so much of an exact science as is the culling of hens. He adds that much can be done, however, toward improving the average production of the flock, particularly during the winter months, by carefully culling the pullets before the laying season starts, using as a basis the rate of maturity, general vigor, quality, and laying type.

Iowan Uses His 700 Acres as Truck Farm

Iowa is widely known for her corn, hogs and fat cattle, but few persons outside the Hawkeye state ever picture Iowa farmers running a truck farm. Despite that, Mitchell county claims the honor of having the largest truck farm in Iowa, probably in the United States, and ventures "possibly in the whole world."

There are 700 acres in the farm, owned and operated by Frank J. Sedlacek of St. Ansgar. This year he is growing 90 acres of onions, 80 acres of cabbage, 60 acres of soy beans, and 150 acres of potatoes, in addition to corn and small grain which are necessary crops in the rotation. All of these crops are on a single farm of 620 acres.

Mr. Sedlacek has 50 acres of onions on another piece of land for which he paid $40,000 two years ago. The price was for the land alone, there being not a building nor a fence on it. In spite of the general hard times he says that this land has returned him 25 per cent on his investment.

Mr. Sedlacek expects to market 100,000 bushels of onions this year. He says his other crops will pay the expense of running the whole farm for a year, leaving the onions as clear profit.

Mr. Sedlacek is worth more than a quarter of a million dollars. He began twenty-one years ago as a hired hand and is now only thirty-nine. He is a pioneer truck gardener, acquiring his land piece by piece, until he now calls 700 acres of some of Iowa's best land his own.

Beeman's Buzzings

The midsummer field day of the Cook County Beekeepers' association will be held at George Herrick's apiary at 100th street, east of Cottage Grove avenue, next Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. E. R. Root, international authority on beekeeping and author of "A B C and X Y Z of Bee Culture," will be the principal speaker and will answer questions. Beekeepers from all over Cook county will attend, according to Samuel Cushman, president of the association.

Most of the apiaries around Evanston are in excellent condition this summer, according to I. R. Woolridge, one of the state bee inspectors who is making a thorough investigation of the apiaries around Chicago this month. He has been inspecting the north shore bee yards during the last week or two.

GARDEN NOTES

The report of G. A. Roser of Franklin county, Ind., is good evidence of the value of planting certified seed potatoes. Mr. Roser dug 236 bushels of potatoes from each acre where he used early Ohio seed and only 150.7 bushels per acre where he used the best of his own seed of the same variety. T. C. Beal, county agent, weighed the potatoes as they were dug from each row and recorded the exact figures.

Commercial gardeners believe green manure crops are good substitutes for manure. Why wouldn't it be a good thing for city gardeners to try some of these crops? Good stable manure is the best fertilizer that can be found, but it is hard for city gardeners to get. Green manure crops such as vetch, red and sweet clover, rye, soy beans, and alfalfa are being tried out. They are turned under in time to decay before the next season's crop is planted. If you have tried any of these crops in your garden, send in the report to this department, so the information may be passed on.

Northwest Needs 20,000 Men for Harvesting

Twenty thousand harvest hands are needed in Minnesota, North Dakota, and Montana along the Great Northern railway, according to estimates compiled from reports sent in by the station agents along the road at the opening of the season a few days ago. The harvesting began in some sections of these three states the last week of July, in other parts of the same states it will start during the next few days.

From 300 to 500 men were needed by farmers around Moorhead, Minn., at the opening of the harvest the first of the week. Farmers around Breckenridge said that they could use 200 men. In Minnesota the wages run from $2.50 to $4 a day.

Grain growers around Fargo, N. D., are offering $2.50 to $3 a day for hands, and say they can use 2,000. They started harvesting the first of August. Five dollars a day is being offered around Colfax, N. D., where 150 to 200 men are needed, according to reports. The work started in that section a few days ago.

Wages in most sections of Montana are from $3 to $4 a day and in some places, Flaxville, for example, ranchers are offering $5 a day for good men.

THE GOLD STANDARD OF VALUES
REO
The External Progress of Automobiles as the Pageant Shows It
The exhibits at the Municipal Pier emphasize amazingly how little the models of 1922 resemble their ancestors.
Not even the famously consistent Reo is an exception to the rule.
There is no kinship at all in line or lustre, in interior or silhouette, between the crescent-hooded veterans of former years and the large and lovely generation of 1922.
Yet all the goodness of materials and workmanship that have made Reo the gold standard of value among American automobiles are identically the same in the two cars.
At our exhibit in the Pageant of Progress, you should examine particularly the significant Reo features of subframe chassis construction, overhead motor lubrication, and giant intake valves.

Hog values suffered a bad slump Saturday, the general average price dropping 20c to $8.95, the lowest day since Feb. 1. Top light at $10.70 showed 30c decline. Shipping orders were lacking affording packers a good chance to lower the range. Common heavy sold in small lots down to $7.00. Trade finished weak with 5,000 left over.

Last week's receipts of hogs totaled 125,000, the smallest since April, 32,500 less than arrived a year ago, and 13,500 less than the ten year average. Estimated average weight last week 255 lbs, being 7 lbs heavier than the previous week and second heaviest average since 1899.

Native beef cattle advanced sharply last week, the in between grades showing most gain. General average price of good beef steers for the week gained 15c over the previous week at $9.65, being as high as any week of the year. Top steers for the week $10.75, with strictly fancy quotable higher.

Lamb Supply Small.

Smallest week's receipts of sheep and lambs since May resulted in further gains during the closing rounds, advancing values slightly above level a week ago. Sheep sold fully 25c higher, with weighty classes up most, while cull lambs ruled 50c above week ago. Feeder demand lacked at the close, though prices held within 10c of the best in two weeks.

Receipts of hogs for Monday are estimated at 16,000 cattle, 39,000 hogs, and 16,000 sheep, against 14,117 cattle, 31,226 hogs, and 21,433 sheep the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 49,000 cattle, 120,000 hogs, and 65,000 sheep, against 47,775 cattle, 122,161 hogs, and 77,632 sheep a year ago.

Probable receipts of hogs for Monday range from 35,000 to 47,000. J. A. Bunyan marked 35,000; W. H. Overman and J. M. Waters, 37,000; F. R. Burrows and Felix Gehrmann, 40,000; Lester Armour, E. R. Gentry, and George Chandler, 41,000; Edward Morris, 43,000; E. S. Waterbury, 45,000, and O. C. Egan, 47,000.

Invest Through Reliable House.

We cannot too strongly impress upon our readers the importance of purchasing securities only through reliable investment houses. During the last few months large numbers of investment concerns, large and small, have failed, wiping out in their crash the savings which thousands of investors had intrusted to their care. Many of these concerns had been swindling the public for years. But as fast as these houses go under, new ones spring up, many of them organized and controlled by the same interests. The "sucker lists" of the defunct companies are passed on and the new ones start out where the old left off, continuing to mulct those who already have been victimized and seeking new prey.

Convincing letters are sent out describing in glowing terms some form of "absolutely safe investment" which will pay a large rate of interest. Attractive circulars are mailed out offering an issue of stock or bonds. These usually are couched in technical and high sounding language and presented in the generally accepted form adopted by the best bond houses in offering their securities. They have an official look which too often impresses the recipient and convinces him that the securities they describe must be good. Some of these circulars actually contain statements and figures which, if true, would make the securities a meritorious investment. But this fact should be borne in mind—that the statements contained in any circular or letter are entitled to that amount of credence only which the integrity of their authors warrants. A reputable investment house may be relied on to truthfully state conditions and facts about the securities it offers, while the shady house will make whatever statements it thinks will help the sale of its securities, regardless of the truth.

This department has received many such circulars, some of which would have been convincing had not a check on the accuracy of statements and figures proved some of them to be false. The average investor, who has no facilities for checking up on them, might easily be induced to part with his money on the strength of such representations as they make, without even thinking to inquire whether or not the house sending out the circular was reputable.

An old established, reliable investment house charges no more for its services than a shady one. It renders dependable service and its duty to the investor does not cease with the sale of a security. Its reputation is built on continued conscientious service and it has this reputation to sustain. The house one deals with is often more important than the security he buys. For their own protection investors are strongly urged to deal only with houses known beyond a doubt to be reputable.

Unusual conditions following the war caused interest rates to advance to such a point that corporations of the highest standing were forced to issue their bonds on a basis of 7½% to 8%. With declining interest rates there has been considerable advance in the market price of these particular issues. Authorities agree that this movement may be expected to continue. Such being the case, those who purchase high grade issues of bonds paying 7½% and 8% at present market prices will net a handsome return on their investment. We have prepared a special bulletin giving the current market quotations on these bonds and those of many other leading corporations. Many of these bonds may be purchased in denominations of $500 and $100. We shall be glad to mail this bulletin to you without obligation upon request.

Keeping good company

As a man is known by the company he keeps, so may a First Mortgage Bond offering be judged by the bank which endorses and sponsors it.

The brains and experience of a bank are reflected in its investments. Policies are directed by the men behind the bank, Directors and principal Stockholders.

This bank is particularly fortunate in the personnel of Directors and Management. Its principal Stockholders and Directors are:

Edward Morris	President, Morris & Co.
Arthur Meeker	Vice President of Armour & Co.
H. E. Otte	Vice President, Nat'l City Bank of Chicago
C. M. Macfarlane	Vice President and Treasurer of Morris & Co.
Thornhill Broome	President, Midland Warehouse & Transfer Co.
J. A. Spoor	Chairman, Board of Directors, Chicago Junction R. R. and Union Stock Yards Co. Director, First National Bank, Chicago
Nelson Morris	Chairman, Board of Directors, Morris & Co., Union Stock Yards Director, First National Bank, Chicago
Edward F. Swift	Vice President, Swift & Co. Director, Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, Chicago

This Bank has for sale unusually high grade First Mortgage Real Estate Gold Bonds yielding 6% interest. They are secured by improved Chicago real estate of twice the value of the total issue.

Before buying any kind of a bond, investigate our offerings. Write, phone or call for our list and our newest booklet—"Sixes or Sevens".

Spot, quiet and unchanged. Sales on the spot, 100 bales; to arrive, none; low middling, 20.00c; middling, 21.25c; good middling, 22.25c. Receipts, 1,165 bales; stock, 72,553 bales.

AUGUST DIVIDENDS.

August dividend and interest disbursements are estimated at $178,100,000, compared with $173,850,200 in the same month last year.

METAL MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—COPPER—Firm at 14 cents for electrolytic delivered through August, September, and October, although some selling agencies are asking a shade more. Copper Export association is taking European orders at 14.20@14.25c c. i. f. European points. TIN—Easier because of weakness in London and the disturbing rail and coal strike. LEAD—Has had a good demand for prompt and forward delivery and is firm. ZINC—Continued strong, but some expect the high prices to stimulate production. ANTIMONY—Quiet.

A $1,000 Investment Creates an Estate of $1,500 to $7,000

This estate consists of a sound $1,000 bond selected by you, and a policy in a nationally famous old line life insurance company—as substantial an estate as anyone could desire.

You buy a $1,000 bond from the carefully selected list of DeWolf Approved securities, and are supplied, under the DeWolf Plan Estate, with a life-insurance policy in one of the best known companies—of such an amount in proportion to your age that the interest from your bond pays the insurance premium.

You make no further payments. You own your $1,000 bond, and you add to it a policy for $500 to $6,000, depending on your age. The bond interest pays the insurance premiums.

You can take advantage of the De Wolf Plan Estate by investing as little as $500, or as much as you wish, either in cash, or in ten equal monthly payments.

Write for a full description of this plan for creating the maximum estate with a given investment. Booklet free.

WHEAT LEADS IN GRAIN DECLINE AFTER EARLY RISE

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Buying power gave out in the wheat market yesterday and while there was a fair advance in the September early on a continuation of short covering the finish was about the low point with net losses of 1⅝@2¼. Other grains were influenced by the action of wheat. Corn closed at losses of ⅝@1c, while oats were off ½@⅝c and rye 1¼@2c.

All grains sold at a new low for the season the last week, with hedging pressure and the foreign financial situation the depressing influences. Speculative buying is not sufficient to absorb the hedges without price recessions. Wheat closed with net losses for the week of 1⅛@3¼, while corn was off 1@1⅝c, oats 1¼@1½c, and rye 4¼@5c. Lard finished with a loss of 47½@55c, and short ribs 80c.

Close Range in Prices.

September and December wheat sold at practically the same price at Chicago, the main pressure being on the latter, while shorts were persistent buyers of the former. There were indications of hedging sales going into the December early, while the slow movement with prospects of a further tightening in the car situation affected the nearby delivery.

Bullish enthusiasm was lacking and the bulge of the previous day weakened the technical position. Rains fell in Canada, where the late crop will be benefited, and there was no activity in the export demand. Spot premiums were ½c lower, as compared with the September. Charters were reported at Atlantic and gulf ports the last week sufficient to take out around 7,500,000 bu grain.

Corn and oats are completely under the domination of wheat. There was little in the situation to cause any material buying, and with increased hedging pressure oats sold down to within a fraction of the lowest figures of the season. Bulk of the trade was of a local character. Crop reports on corn were generally favorable, except from parts of South Dakota and Minnesota where rain is needed.

While there was no material pressure on rye the undertone was easier in sympathy with wheat. No. 2 on track sold at 2¼c over September.

Lard and Ribs Down.

Smaller packers were on the selling side of lard, and with hogs weaker and sharply lower cured product declined and closed with net losses of 15@27½c on lard and 22½c on ribs. Packing at Chicago for the summer season to date aggregates 2,787,000 hogs, against 2,650,000 last year. Prices follow:

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

A great many wheat traders became bearish yesterday after being fairly friendly to the buying side on Friday. The change in sentiment was due to selling of December by the largest buyers of September on Friday and to lighter buying support. December was the weakest and closed only ½c over September, against ⅝c the previous day. It was an off day for foreigners and for most of the seaboard exporters, who were not disposed to furnish buying support, as Liverpool was closed and will remain so until Tuesday. The trade is looking for irregular prices, with a lower trend, unless there is better general support.

Of late there has been buying on all breaks and expectations are that a sharp decline will see renewed buying by the seaboard. The movement is restricted by car scarcity, and is under 14 per cent, the average for this season in receipts at Chicago and 4 per cent short at the primary markets.

There is little in the coarse grain situation to attract attention. Moderate hedging pressure is noticeable in both corn and oats, while buying is limited. When sellers appear prices recede, only to rally upon the appearance of good buying.

The annual crop report of the Continental and commercial National bank is to appear on Monday. Expectations are that it will show larger crops than suggested by the July government report. The August government report is due on Tuesday at 2:15 o'clock, Chicago time, and the trade is looking for an increase in the spring wheat estimates to more than offset any decrease in winter wheat returns. An advance in the par yield basis is expected to offset any moderate decline in the estimated condition, as compared with July returns.

Wheat receipts at primary markets since July 1 aggregate 52,232,000 bu, compared with 79,541,000 bu for the same time last year. Chicago has received 12,879,000 bu, compared with 18,276,000 bu last year; Kansas City, 13,538,000 bu, or almost 10,000,000 bu less than last year; St. Louis, 6,235,000 bu, compared with 11,888,000 bu last year.

Foreigners were unwilling to follow the advance in wheat prices here on Saturday, and, while the leading interests here and at the seaboard believe that what value should hold around a certain level and possibly a little better, the question in the mind of the trade is, will the foreigners continue to do their buying on the breaks. Cash premiums in all markets were easier yesterday, with No. 2 hard winter wheat 9c over Chicago September, delivered in Buffalo.

Contract stocks of wheat in public elevators are said to have been reduced 1,000,000 bu the last week, and are estimated at around 250,000 bu, the smallest of the season. At the end of May there were more than 7,000,000 bu. In five days nearly 4,000,000 bu of wheat were loaded out of public and private elevators last week; also 1,745,000 bu corn, 288,000 bu oats, and 32,000 bu rye. There were also heavy loadings on Saturday. In all nearly 6,000,000 bu of grain were loaded out during the week.

"Aside from the dull ham market, the consuming demand for hog products is very good, especially for meats and lard," says W. L. Gregson. "The domestic trade in lard could hardly be better, as the only competition it has in quality is butter, and in price the competition is not debatable. The week end developments suggest a much better trading position in lard in the near future."

"We are unable to agree with the views that farmers are holding their wheat voluntarily for better prices," says S. C. Harris of Cross, Roye & Saunders. "We believe that the curtailment of the movement is due primarily to the strike situation resulting in a car shortage. This opinion we believe is confirmed by the fact that country elevators are largely filled with grain awaiting shipment."

Domestic consumption of wheat in the United States in 1921-22 is estimated at 460,720,000 bu by P. S. Goodman for Clement, Curtis & Co. This compares with 452,814,000 bu last year. The amount on farms and second hand at the end of the year is estimated at 20,805,000 bu, exclusive of flour, against 91,739,000 bu last year.

Winnipeg messages said the leading exporter there was selling wheat and weakening values of futures, while cash premiums were reported as higher. Harvesting has started in the Saskatchewan.

NEWS OF THE CROPS

Thrashing returns covering parts of southern Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota as received by C. E. Lewis & Co. showed average yields of spring wheat of 20.7 bu; rye, 23.6 bu; barley, 24.3 bu, and oats 40.2 bu per acre. Wheat and rye are about an average and oats and barley somewhat less than expected, although much better than for the last two years.

Italian wheat harvest is progressing. Crop is estimated at 148,000,000 bu or 20,000,000 bu less than last year and compares with 141,000,000 bu in 1920. Russian crops are deteriorating and unless rain is received the yield will be small. German rye crop is larger than the average, and wheat an average. Rainfall in the Punjab district of India is ample.

"From Winnipeg here crop is generally good," wired George M. Le Count, to Stein, Alstrin & Co. from Portage la Prairie, Man. "Oats and early wheat being harvested. Large area here hailed out."

New wheat crop in New South Wales estimated at 40,000,000 bu. Reserves of old wheat estimated at 3,200,000 bu. Total exports so far this season are 71,000,000, or 9,000,000 bu less than the general trade estimate as to the amount that country has for export.

Large areas in parts of the northwest reported rains badly needed for corn, according to the semi-monthly report of the department of agriculture covering Montana, the Dakotas and Minnesota.

PREDICT BIG TIRE DEMAND.

Akron tire manufacturers estimate 40,000,000 tires will have to be produced to satisfy the demand in 1923. This is based on the certainty of 11,000,000 motor cars by the end of 1922. Consumption this year will run about 33,000,000 tires, but if the 40,000,000 mark is reached in 1923 much idle factory space will be used.

FINANCIAL NOTES

While the settlement of the railroad strike is expected to be effected in sufficient time to enable this country to survive the undoubted pinch of curtailed fuel supplies in the fall, the condition in Canada—which depends in considerable measure on the United States for her coal—is reported as grave. According to reports today, the coal available for consumption in Canada declined during April to 1,300,498 tons, from 2,840,727 tons as of March 31. Imports from this country stood at about 680,000 tons short, as compared with more than 1,500,000 tons in March and an average of 810,252 tons in April of the three preceding years. It is understood that if an acute shortage looms up in the near future steps will be taken to import large quantities of British and other coal.

Next Thursday the United States Steel corporation will issue its monthly statement showing the amount of forward business on the books as of the close of July. This statement is awaited with keen interest in the financial district, as it will show what effect the railroad strike and the prolonged coal strike has had on new steel buying. The coal strike has been in force since April 1, but up to the close of June unfilled orders have steadily increased. The real effects of the coal strike, however, only began to be serious during July, judging from trade reports which declare that twenty-one furnaces were banked in that month because of a shortage of fuel. Thus far no semi-official estimates have been made, but in some quarters a small increase is looked for while in others a large gain is predicted.

The news from abroad that Germany had suddenly shifted balances of from 60,000,000 to 70,000,000 francs from Paris to Holland and Switzerland reminded some of the international bankers who have transacted business with Germany this year of methods which have been employed in handling the balances in New York. Generally four or five large institutions have been used, but the balances have been constantly shifted, sometimes from one institution to another within the center, and they are never allowed to grow very large in any one place. At the present time the German deposits here are not large, and it is the belief of the bankers they are only of sufficient size to care for shipments of products of packing houses which have been arranged, and to have no connection with future reparations payments at all.

Recent issues of new common stock have been so well taken by investors that it has started a chain of thought in the minds of some of the railroad bankers as to the probable reception a moderate issue of common stock of a first class railroad would receive. As a matter of fact, this very problem has been discussed by the executives of at least one prominent trunk line railroad within the week, and it would not prove a surprise if such an offering were to come along before the fall of the year. Subscriptions probably would be limited to a few shares to each investor.

The Cities Service company has announced a plan for payment of accumulated scrip dividends on its preferred and reference stocks. Holders of scrip may surrender the paper for cash at par or may accept series E 8 per cent convertible debentures, due 1966. Each $100 bond may be exchanged for $85 par value of preference stock and $15 par value of common stock and at the time of making conversion the holder will also receive an additional amount equivalent to all dividends paid on the outstanding common stock, equal to those which would have been paid him if he had owned such common stock from the date of issue of the debenture.

The immediate outlook for the shipping industry is not very cheerful, according to statements made by those interested in the importing and exporting business. The unsettlement of the European situation has, for some time, caused a slow but constant curtailment of overseas trade, and at the same time freight rates and charter rates continue low. A conference of leading shipping interests was held in this city this last week, the result of which is expected to be another lowering of trans-Atlantic rates.

The Chicago Federal Reserve bank reports the weekly movement of credits as follows: Debits to individual deposit account reported for the week ending Aug. 2, by 200 banks in 24 leading clearing house cities in the Seventh federal reserve district, aggregate $967,385,000, compared with $907,821,000 a week ago. Aggregate debits to individual deposit account amounted to $967,385,000, compared with $937,875,000 for the corresponding week last year.

7½% Will be the Yield on Beak Plan Bonds Until September 1st

Beak Plan First Mortgage Real Estate Bonds pay the Highest Rate of Interest Consistent with Safety!

Because our bond business is only one department of our comprehensive organization, it carries only its proportion of expense. We are therefore able to share this saving with our customers by paying a higher rate of interest.

While all other classes of investments have been paying decreasing interest rates, Beak Plan Bonds have been sold to yield 7½%—almost the high peak of interest returns.

Until September First (less than a month away) investors can continue to buy these high grade bonds at the present rate of 7½%.

Beak Plan Bonds represent the maximum of safety because they are secured by absolute first mortgages on Chicago buildings which are already completed and occupied and whose value and earning power are definitely known. In many cases they are rented and managed by our own organization, which is an additional protection to the bondholder. Easy to investigate!

We are now offering a selection of six different issues, all of which yield 7½% and have a very large margin of safety. We will be glad to send you complete description.

The New York Times.

New York, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—So far as their action of today was evidence, the financial markets ended the week with a feeling of confidence that the issue of the impending conferences, on our own labor deadlock and on the German reparations, will avert the predicted crisis.

On the stock exchange, notwithstanding the usual tendency of a week-end market to run counter to the general movement of the week, prices advanced again, the railway shares leading the moderate recovery and closing prices quite generally at the best. Comparison of values for the completed week would not suggest to the casual observer a period of doubt and apprehension. Net advances of 1 and 2 points are numerous and net declines so few as hardly to count in the reckoning.

Stock Market Shows Optimism.

Today's attitude of the stock market was naturally taken in connection with the intimations from Washington that labor leaders were again in conference with the government.

The firmness which prevailed in foreign exchange rates (except in the German market) also was equally interpreted in line with the much calmer and more conciliatory dispatches from Paris. An advance of sterling to a rate touched only on a few days during the last six weeks was perhaps a logical response to the [illegible] of the exchequer's positive re[illegible] of his government's purpose to resume interest payment on the debt to our treasury.

All the large increases in German paper money circulation reported in recent weeks were exceeded in the report of the Reichsbank received from Berlin today, as of July 31, which disclose an addition of [illegible] marks to its outstanding [illegible]. The present aggregate is [illegible] marks.

New York Bank Reserves Rise.

An increase of $11,197,450 in the surplus reserve of the New York clearing house banks brings this item at the end of the week to $50,821,000. Loans and discounts show an increase of $7,949,000, while demand deposits are less by $16,635,000. Reserves of member banks in the Federal Reserve bank increased by $9,253,000. Government deposits are about $36,000,000 higher. Details of the statement, with comparisons, follow:

CHICAGO CURB MARKET

A slightly irregular market without particular price trend featured Chicago unlisted securities. Ford of Canada was weak, relinquishing some ten points to 374 bid, 377 asked. Paige-Detroit was offered at 21½, with little interest on the buying side. Packard Motor Car common quoted 13⅝ bid, 13⅝ asked, was off about 1 point. Timken-Detroit was wanted at 28 with offerings at 29. Sales of Motor Wheel ranged between 13¼ and 14. Selling pressure forced McCord from top sales to a close of 5⅞ bid, 6 asked. Goodyear Tire and Rubber issues were lower, common closing 9½ bid, 10 asked—off one point; preferred 31 bid, 33 asked—off two points.

[illegible] was again 106 bid for the common with odd lot offerings at 108. The preferred improved one point to 98 bid, 100 asked. Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes was quoted 43 bid, 44 asked, with few reported sales. Transactions in Burroughs' Adding Machine were reported between 133 and 136, ex 25 per cent stock dividend. Bids of 340 for Northwestern Yeast again failed to bring out stock. Sales of Avery common ranged between 23 and 24½. The preferred was wanted at 57 with no stock for sale near current quotations. Chicago Railway Equipment was bid up from 130 to 145 without attracting sellers.

Trading in the sugar group was quiet with little change in values. The closing bid and asked prices follow: Columbia 6½ to 7, Holland-St. Louis 5¼ to 5⅝, Godchaux preferred 76 to 77, Michigan 6⅞ to 7¼, Utah-Idaho 8½ to 8½.

The public utility group was dull, although somewhat irregular. Adirondack Electric Power common lost one point at 19 to 20. Preferred was steady at 92 bid, 94 asked. Cities Service common was off some 11 points at 180@183; bankers' shares 1¼ points at 18 to 18½; the preferred was steady, however, at 67¼ to 67¾. Northern States Power common was quoted 90½ bid, 91 asked; the preferred 91 bid, 93 asked.

CHICAGO BANK CLEARINGS

Chicago bank clearings last week totaled $437,700,000, an increase of $34,500,000 over the preceding week and also a gain of $[illegible]7,000,000 over the corresponding week in 1921. Balances last week totaled $42,700,000, an increase of $4,000,000 over the preceding week, but a decrease of $3,700,000 from the corresponding week in 1921. CHICAGO STOCK TRANSACTIONS

An unusual volume of trading in traction securities and some sharp advances due to settlement of the local traction strike, featured trading in Chicago stocks in the week-end session yesterday. Otherwise the market was dull. Chicago City Railway first mortgage 5s advanced 3½ points. Chicago City and Connecting Railways sinking fund 5s rose 3 points and Chicago Railways 5s B gained 1½. City and Connecting preferred stock advanced 1⅜. Montgomery Ward was the only active stock issue and the price advanced nearly a point. On small sales American Shipbuilding was up a point, while Quaker Oats preferred fell a point. Trading in Gimmel Bros., Inc., non-par common, "when issued," was started at 44 to 45, while the preferred, also "when issued," started at 102.

DRY GOODS AND GARMENT NEWS

COPYRIGHT: 1922 BY FAIRCHILD NEWS SERVICE

BOSTON, Mass.—A creditors' committee of the United States Worsted company has formulated a plan of reorganization which will be sent to the shareholders within a short time. The name of the company is to be changed. The reorganization is expected to provide about $2,500,000, less charges.

LAWRENCE, Mass.—Representatives of the Pacific Mills here conferred with union officials with a view to ending the textile strike.

NEW YORK.—New York men's clothing manufacturers disclaim any part in alleged $1,000,000 clothing surplus sale here. Same value can be obtained in retail stores, according to some.

BOSTON, Mass.—The retail trade board of the Boston chamber of commerce has adopted the plan of the Men's Apparel club to stage a style week in all big retail apparel stores during the week of the men's apparel show, Sept. 25-29.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—Figures just compiled here show that New Orleans has one retail store for every twenty families. The number is considerably above the average.

LONDON.—The Labor Gazette gives the number of British unemployed at the end of July as 1,362,300, a decrease of 6,974 from the last report. The number of short time workers dropped 12,349 to 72,900.

PARIS.—American buyers in Paris number far more than last year. In spite of continued reports from commissionaires of dull business, some are beginning to admit that the aggregate business done has already exceeded last year's figures.

NEW YORK.—Volume of raw silk imports for this fiscal year is the largest in the history of the industry. A total of 354,363 bales were imported, as against 217,910 in 1921.

NEW YORK.—The Scottish Woolen Trademark Association has begun an advertising campaign in America to familiarize the public with its fabrics, following the recent visit of a delegation of the association to this country.

NEW YORK.—Muskrat continues to be the leading item in the fur market. Prices are holding firm. Market supplies of raccoon are also small and high priced.

NEW YORK.—From present indications all previous records for attendance will be broken this year at the convention of the National Association of Retail Clothiers to be held in this city Sept. 11 to 15. Reports from state organization indicate efforts to get a maximum attendance.

DUPLEX HOMES LATEST PLAN OF GOLD COASTERS

Community Benefits and Privacy, Too.

Now comes the gold coast with its latest venture—the coöperative home.

The initial step in this direction has been taken by a group of eight prominent Chicagoans who, for their purpose, are operating under the name of the Dearborn Realty and Building corporation. They are Albert K. Isham, William E. Parsons, Clarence K. Peck, Albert B. Dewey Jr., John Wentworth, McClelland Barclay, A. N. Rebori, and A. G. Loomis.

For some time this group of men has sought to devise a plan whereby a building having all the advantages of a well kept apartment building could be erected which did not subject its tenants to the privacy of a goldfish. The duplex home plan under one roof was suggested by Architect A. N. Rebori, who drew the plans, and the idea was accepted.

Cost $300,000.

The building is being erected on the northwest corner of Schiller and North Dearborn streets at a cost of $300,000. It will be four stories, containing twenty individual homes, each two stories in height. Each owner will occupy one of the homes and twelve are to be rented.

The living and dining rooms and the kitchen will be on the lower floor of each home. The bedrooms will be on the upper story, reached by a private staircase. The living rooms of the lower homes and four of the upper homes will have full two stories in height, with balconies and log burning fireplaces as features.

Economies of Apartments.

In planning the building A. N. Rebori of the architectural firm of Rebori, Wentworth & Dewey, which company designed and financed the building, said each tenant will enjoy the features of a private home while also getting the benefits of apartment building service — to wit: economy of one roof, common foundation, central heating plant, laundries with modern equipment, sunken garden with fountains and planting, janitor service, and controlled servants' entrances.

No Elevators.

In this community scheme the privacy of the tenants is in no way violated. There will be no elevators in the building, as the entrance level to the upper homes will be only eighteen feet above the sidewalk.

The exterior of the building will be Indiana buff limestone trimming and colonial brick laid up with white joints. The sunken garden is open to the south and the two wings of the "U" plan are tied by a triple stone arch closed from the street by an ornamental iron grill between the arches. The entrances will not be through the court but through two main entrances from the street.

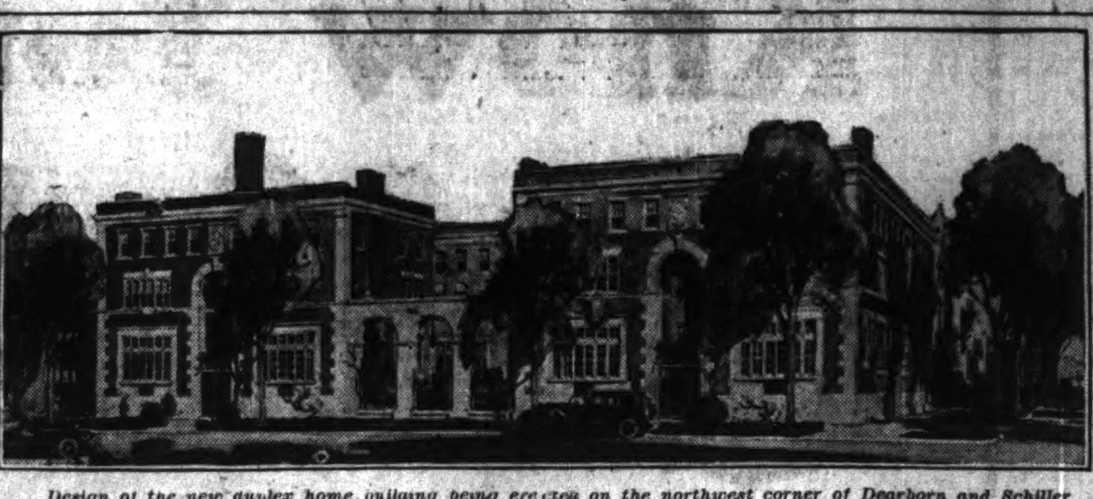
Aurora Man Pays $90,000 for Pullman Property

Nathan Ginsberg, one of the oldest merchants of Aurora and owner of the Fair store in that city, is the purchaser of the two story store and office building at 11141 South Michigan avenue, Pullman, from August Jacobs of Los Angeles, for an indicated $90,000, subject to $30,000. The store is occupied by a Woolworth 5 and 10 cent store, which has a lease of fifteen years' duration.

Mortgage Bond Sales in July Break All Records

Unprecedented activity featured the real estate bond market for July, according to W. J. Greenebaum, vice president of Greenebaum Sons Investment company. During this period there was a greater demand for these securities than had ever before been experienced. The volume of sales of first mortgage real estate bonds in July exceeded all previous monthly records.

Double Decked Homes for North Side



Design of the new duplex home building being erected on the northwest corner of Dearborn and Schiller streets by eight prominent Chicagoans. Architect A. N. Rebori, who designed the structure, has arranged it so that each home has two stories. All of the lower homes and four of those on the upper tier have two story living rooms with balconies and log burning fireplaces. A feature of the financing is that instead of putting out a bond issue the owners have given the Northern Trust company a first mortgage for a loan of $150,000. The total cost is $300,000.

DEDICATE ILLINOIS LIFE'S 2D UNIT ON LAKE SHORE DRIVE

GEN. CHARLES G. DAWES.

Gen. Charles G. Dawes was the principal speaker yesterday at the laying of the corner stone of the second unit of the Illinois Life Insurance building at 212 Lake Shore drive. The first unit is practically completed and is being occupied by the company's office force. When completed the second unit will be half of the complete structure.

Others who spoke under the flag draped structure were Eugene R. Pike, president of the Lincoln park commissioners, and Thomas J. Houston, superintendent of insurance of Illinois. The building is the first office structure to be erected on the Lake Shore drive.

NETCHER ESTATE GETS $2,750,000 FIVE YEAR LOAN

The estate of Charles Netcher, owner of the Boston Store, through Mrs. Molly Netcher Newbury, trustee, yesterday secured a loan of $2,750,000 on part of the Boston store property, 111x105 feet, for a period of five years at 5½ per cent, payable semi-annually, from the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company. Of this amount $1,250,000 is to be paid out on an old mortgage on the Champlain building property, while the remainder will be used for the needs of the Boston Store. Hamilton Moses of the law firm of Moses, Rosenthal & Kennedy represented Mrs. Newbury.

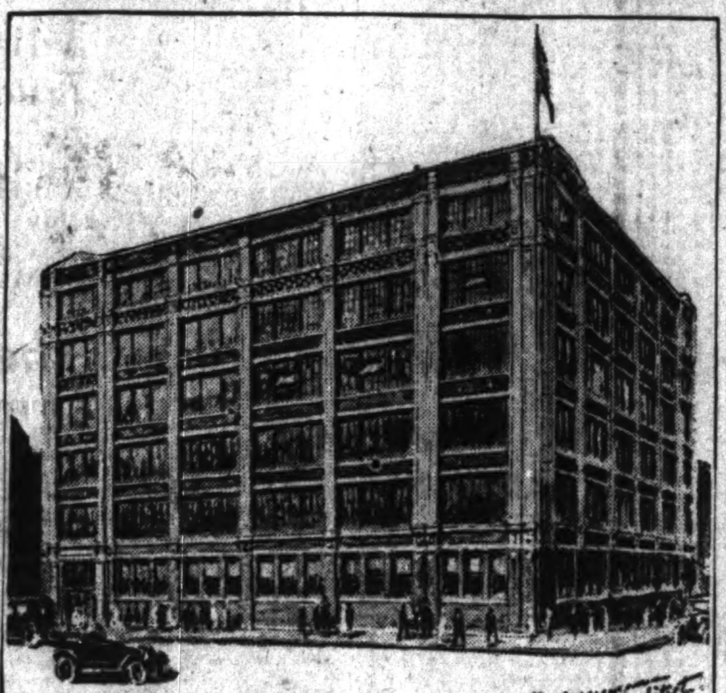
Record $2,500,000 Loan on New Temple Building

The $2,500,000 loan made by the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company of Milwaukee on the new Chicago Temple building now being erected on the site of the old First Methodist church on the southeast corner of Washington and Clark streets, was recorded yesterday. The borrower was represented by William Warren Dixon and the insurance company by William Scott Bond. The loan runs for ten years at 5½ per cent.

BUYS CORNER APARTMENTS.

Title to the twenty-four apartment building on the southeast corner of Greenview and Farwell avenues, reported sold in Tuesday's Tribune by Frank F. Funk for $102,000, subject to $76,000, was taken yesterday by Charles King, only a nominal consideration being shown, subject to $99,500.

$450,000 West Side Printing Plant



Alfred S. Alschuler Architect

Erection of a six story printing plant costing approximately $450,000 is to be started soon on the southeast corner of West Jackson boulevard and Laflin street by the United States Sample company. The structure will occupy 125 feet square, according to Alfred S. Alschuler, the architect. There will be an attractive facade and the latest style elevators. Each story will have a 250 per square foot loading capacity. The company will occupy the first four floors, according to Allen Ripley, president, and the upper two floors will be rented out.

NORTH STATE STREET DEAL.

F. W. Spelz has paid a reported $55,000 to Stanley R. Graham for the three story store and apartment building at 712-14 North State street. The purchaser gave as part payment the northeast corner of Berwyn and Winthrop avenues, improved with two two apartment buildings, at a consideration of $35,000.

BEG YOUR PARDON

Yesterday's real estate column stated that the leasing of two warehouses on East North Water street for the storage of fruit and vegetables gives the company the largest cold storage warehouse space in Chicago. What was meant is that it gives the company the largest general warehouse space in the city. The new building to be erected by Wakem & McLaughlin is to be for general warehouse purposes.

Realty Notes

The Globe Realty company of Memphis, Tenn., and Jackson, Miss., has opened a Chicago office at 127 North Dearborn street, with Neely Bowen as local manager.

The annual convention of the Illinois Realtors' association will be held Oct. 19, 20, and 21 at Decatur.

COAL AND RAIL STRIKES INJURE BUILDING HERE

Value of Permits Drops $10,362,550 in July.

BY E. J. BRUNNER.
[Editor the American Contractor.]

Chicago's building boom which has done so much to revive business conditions has had a burden placed upon it by the coal and rail strikes which will have to be carried to the end of the season. Like any other burden, it will be harder to carry the longer it is carried, and its fatiguing effect will be felt more three weeks from now than at the present time.

There is food for thought in the fact that whereas during June the valuation of building permits issued was $26,576,850, the valuation for July is only $16,214,300. One swallow does not make a summer nor do the permits for any one month rule for the season, but a drop of $10,000,000 in initial planning for prospective work in Chicago can not be overlooked.

Effect of Strikes.

Not all this decrease can be laid to the two great strikes which are wrapped around the throat of the nation's business, but the part these strikes have had in discouraging plans for building in Chicago must not be underestimated. The effects of the two strikes can not be wholly separated. If we had an adequate supply of freight cars suitable for handling heavy materials, the shopmen's strike would hardly assume the immediate position of importance which it does.

The construction industry already is faced with a priority ruling on cars drastic enough to hamper progress but the full force of the ruling can only be felt when coal shipments commence in heavy volume. For these reasons it is imperative to the welfare of the construction industry that the rail shopmen go back to work. Both they and the artisans in the construction industry can consider the almost certain let down in employment if strikes continue another week.

Crimps Basic Materials.

High priced coal and scarcity of coal has already put a crimp into the production of basic construction materials. One large cement company has been forced to pay so much more for coal now than it paid five months ago that the cost per barrel has been increased around seventy cents. Somewhere down the line this is producing or will produce a deterrent effect upon construction activity. Steel mills producing construction steel are running low on coal. Some have shut down. So far as Illinois is concerned the recent ruling that it must depend upon Illinois coal has added one more increment to Chicago's building burden.

The average price of structural steel at Pittsburgh base rates has advanced from $1.55 per 100 in January to $1.68 in June, $1.75 in July, and is slightly over $1.75 at present date. Stoppage of mills may be expected to result in higher prices, and certainly high coal prices affect steel.

Chicago Prices.

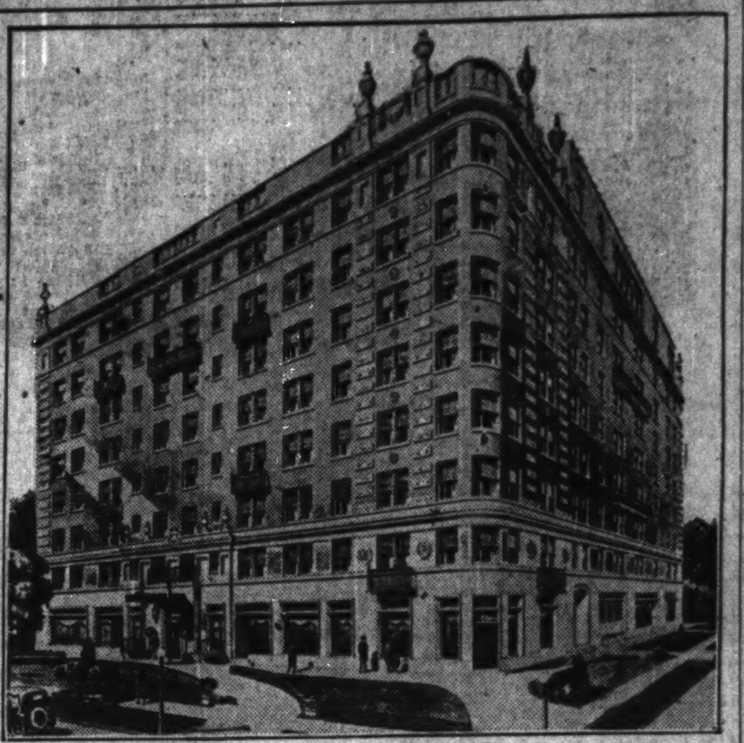
Chicago is very fortunate so far as brick prices are concerned. Twelve dollars per 1,000 in car lots to contractors has been the constant quotation throughout the seven months of this year. In contrast to this price Boston pays (average July price) $19.80 per 1,000, and New York pays $24.80 (truckload lots on job). The Chicago price of Portland cement has advanced since January from $1.97 per barrel to $2.05 per barrel. Cement manufacturers have not passed much of the high coal costs on to consumers.

Labor costs are high. Not sufficient edge has been taken off the boom as yet to make the supply of trained tradesmen as great as the demand. Even unions going along with the Landis award are receiving wages in many cases far in excess of the award scale. A decrease of jobs, due to seasonal nature of building and to the cumulated effects of the rail and coal strikes, will probably serve to line up the unions for a thorough reorganization of the Building Trades council.

South Side Homes Get New Owners During Week

Three Chicago business men have purchased homes on the south side, the total considerations of which is $46,000. W. L. Lerch, general manager of the Great American Insurance company, has secured the colonial brick residence of William B. Allbright at 4937 Dorchester avenue for $17,500. J. L. East Jr. of the East Bros. Coal company has bought the two story brick and stone residence at 5535 Cornell avenue from the estate of A. A. Stevens. William C. Lawson has taken the brick home of Dr. Frank E. Pierce at 5114 Harper avenue for $17,000. T. D. O'Hern & Co. were brokers.

Birchwood's New $1,100,000 Hotel



The accompanying illustration is Architect Paul T. Haagen's sketch of the new $1,100,000 hotel which is to be constructed on the northwest corner of Sheridan road and Chase avenue by the Sheridan Beach Hotel corporation. The building will be eight stories high, will contain 182 rooms so arranged as to be available for apartments of from one room and bath to five rooms and two baths. Five stores will share the first floor. The building is to be built of reinforced concrete, fireproof construction.

WINS FIRST PRIZE IN ESSAY CONTEST WITH 44 VERSES OF POETRY

W. C. REGELIN.

W. C. Regelin, head of the real estate firm of Regelin & Böerste, blossomed out yesterday as winner of the first prize of "the best story and essay of the 8,000 mile trip" taken by members of the Chicago Real Estate board recently while en route and coming home from the San Francisco convention. Incidentally, Mr. Regelin has been "knighted" by his colleagues as poet laureate of the Chicago Real Estate board.

Mr. Regelin's contribution was a poem in forty-four verses. Tom Roberts, Oak Park's star orator, is the winner of the second prize, and the third prize went to Mrs. Majella D. Bede, wife of one of the editors of the National Real Estate Journal. The prizes were Navaho blankets.

BLOCK OF STONE FRONT STORES FOR GOLD COAST

Erection of a two story solid sto front building on the square bl bounded by Rush, Oak, State str and Bellevue place, at an approxi cost of $300,000, will be started with thirty days after present leases on the property expire, according to an announcement made yesterday. The owners, who secured the property last we from Charles M. Sommers for a reported $217,000, are Dr. Vincent Mar Max Grossman, attorney, and Seym Marks, real estate investments.

Architects Levy and Klein have been retained to draw plans for the building, which will have 672 feet of str frontage. The ground floor will conta thirty stores, while the upper floor w be built as one large loft. Unique illuminations will feature the exterior of the building at night.

The site was purchased two years ago by Mr. Sommers from the Muhlke estate, which acquired it as a land grant from the government. Mr. Marks was the broker and Mr. Grossman acted as attorney for the purchasers. Mr. Sommers was represented by Joseph Muhlke, attorney. The seller claims the office of Perry Ulrich was his real estate representative.

$93,000 IS PAID FOR FOUR HOMES ON NORTH SHORE

Suburban real estate deals yesterday were featured by the sale of four homes in Wilmette for a total sum aggregating $93,000. The firm of M. E. Barker & Co., Wilmette, were the brokers.

The home of William P. Little at 1103 Ashland avenue, Wilmette, was sold to H. A. Beidler of Chicago for a reported $30,000 cash. The Herman Heuchling home at 801 Forest avenue went to Richard Wilson of Wilmette for $18,500, subject to $11,000. Fritz George sold his brick residence at 8th and Greenleaf streets to J. C. Schmidt Jr. for $21,500, subject to $11,500. Mr. Schmidt also purchased the Frederick H. Gurtler home at 1000 Lake avenue for $23,000, subject to $12,000.

Don't Shop Around for a Heating Plant Call an

"R & B Man"

Franklin 2866

When you buy a heating plant, you don't want a price half so much as you want heat. In the midst of the biggest building boom in years, we find some people shopping for prices and installing heating plants not adapted in the least to the needs of their buildings.

Don't "gamble" on your heat. Don't risk installing a plant that will be inadequate when hard winter comes—or that will "eat you out of house and home" with a ravenous consumption of fuel. Call an "R & B Man."

At Your Service—Heating Specialists

To help everyone in and near Chicago who is building, we have installed a wonderful service. A group of our men who have spent a lifetime in the heating business have been made available to advise builders on the kind of heat they should use.

Just call Franklin 2866 and ask to have an "R & B Man" see you. Take his advice. He is unprejudiced and unbiased—for Richardson & Boynton make all kinds of heating equipment. He knows warm air, and steam, and vapor, and hot water. He knows their relative costs. He can look at your plans and tell you what is best. He will give you expert advice, without a cent of cost to you

If you want estimates, and want to be sure that what you buy is the best, call an "R & B Man" first when you consider—

Warm Air Furnaces
Steam Boilers
Hot Water Boilers
Vapor Vacuum Systems
Smokeless Boilers
Tank Heaters
Garage Heaters
Gas, Coal & Combination Ranges

Show your plans to an "R & B Man" and he will be able to determine exactly what heating system will be best. His advice is based on the construction of the building, arrangement of the rooms, cubic content of the house—a score of factors which a man can learn to estimate correctly only by spending a lifetime in the heating business.

Perfect Gas Range

There are all sizes and shapes of Perfect Gas Ranges, and all of them are not only good baking but good looking. They are made with cast iron oven bottoms which will not rust out. They also consume less gas than steel bottom ranges. The extra boiling lid excludes all odors from cooking. Made with 14, 16 and 18 inch ovens in full enamel, semi-enamel and standard trims.

Richardson & Boynton also make a full and especially fine line of coal ranges and combination coal and gas ranges. They are extraordinary. Ask for prices.

"DOG DAYS" FAIL TO SHAKE BRISK BUILDING SALES

Eight Transfers Bring the Sellers $870,000.

The dog vacation days are with us, Al Chase, real estate editor, is sojourning on his Glen Ellyn country estate for his annual two weeks, and the street car strike has done its best to tie up business, but nothing has kept building sales from mounting higher than ever during the last week. Odds and ends of the week's transfers show a total of $870,000 represented in eight deals, each of which were for more than $50,000.

One of the largest is the thirty-nine apartment building at Marquette road and Kenwood avenue, which was sold by John S. Reiner to William S. Stewart for a reported $162,500, subject to $115,000. M. Hoffman & Co. were the brokers. Another large deal was the purchase of the thirty-six apartment building on the northeast corner of Washington boulevard and Kildare avenue for $132,500 by Otto Bergl from George H. J. Haas. Attorney James A. Russell represented the purchaser, while P. J. Maloney & Co. represented the seller.

$225,000 Deal.

The forty-six apartment and eight store building on the southeast corner of Calumet avenue and 61st street, has been sold by the estate of William H. Gohir to Oscar C. Hagen for an indicated $225,000.

The two story building on the northwest corner of Greenwood avenue and 55th street, has been sold by the Chicago Title & Trust company to Abraham Cohen for an indicated $90,000, subject to $40,000. The structure contains ten stores, six apartments and two offices. Hyman Soboroff, attorney, represented the purchaser.

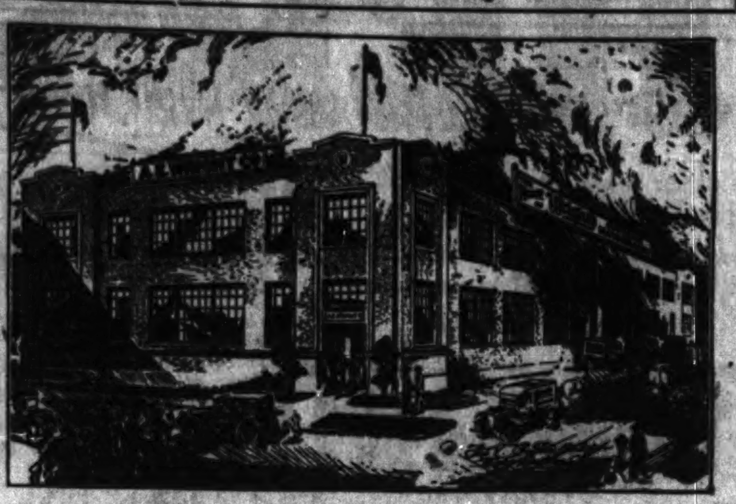
Martha D. Smith has purchased from Samuel Sprecher, the eighteen apartment building on the southeast corner of Greenview avenue and Irving Park boulevard for a reported $85,000, subject to $60,500. The purchaser gave as part payment the twelve apartment building at 4040-42 Clifton avenue at $40,000, subject to $15,000. M. Hoffman & Co. were the brokers.

Stores Bring $65,000.

The three one story stores with fifty feet of ground at 6823-25-27 Stony Island avenue have been sold by James V. Cunningham to Emil Mayer for a reported $65,000, subject to $24,000. J. A. Malooly & Co. were the brokers.

Robert Langford has sold to Clarence C. Slater the vacant property on the southwest corner of Marquette road and Stony Island avenue, 107x150, for an indicated $60,000. It is understood that the property will be used as a gasoline filling station by the Standard Oil company. George A. Chapman has purchased from Mary M. Price, the four story building at 60 East South Water street for an indicated $50,000. Willoughby & Co. were the brokers.

New Factory for the A. E. Wright Co.



An exodus out of Evanston, which it helped to make famous by the manufacture of orange marmalade and allied products, is to be made by the A. E. Wright company. The new location will be at the southeast corner of Diversey parkway and Herndon street, where the company will build a new two story manufacturing plant at a cost of about $80,000. The company will abandon its present quarters at 1308 Sherman avenue, Evanston. Fred V. Prather is the architect.

RAILROAD NOTES

The recent activity of New Haven lately has been cause for analysis of this company's position by railways statisticians, with the view of determining its success in grappling with the rate and wage readjustments. For the first half year the road reported a deficit, after fixed charges, amounting to $1,117,122, as compared with $12,565,386 for the same period a year ago. That the coal strike has made considerable inroads on the company's revenues is indicated by the deficit of $475,462 in June, the largest deficit of any month this year. According to interests close to the management, the outlook is that the second half of the year will cancel the first half's deficit and leave a small surplus. The progress of earnings, however, depends on the coal strike, although general business is expected to improve.

Car loadings on railroads operating east of Chicago and St. Louis have kept up surprisingly well during the last week in spite of all adverse factors, according to officials. With the exception of coal, most commodities show an increase as compared to a year ago. Roads are still in good shape as a rule in regard to equipment. Officials of southern roads reported an increasing movement of wheat to the gulf ports, a fair movement of cotton, a continued small run of coal, and a quite normal tonnage of iron and steel products. No change is reported in the coal situation.

The interstate commerce commission suspended for four months the tariffs of railroads which if permitted to have become operative would have forced the carriage of pink, yellow, and brown sections of newspapers from baggage car to express service at practically double rates.

The commission has certified to the secretary of the treasury that $72,372 was due the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis in final settlement of the guaranty account. The total to that road was $541,372, all of which except the sum before mentioned having been paid.

The railroads have repaid $81,363,000 loans made by the treasury under the transportation act, it was disclosed by the railroad administration. The director general advanced $314,593,943 to the carriers out of the $300,000,000 revolving fund. With the exception of two or three applications, which were made before the life of the fund expired, the government will make no more loans to the carriers.

Waukegan Kiwanians Invite Harding to Golf with Them

Waukegan Kiwanians yesterday extended an invitation to President Harding to try the course at the Glen Flora Country club Aug 14, when sixteen Kiwanis clubs will hold a golf tournament there. The nation's executive is to be the guest of Gen. Charles G. Dawes at some north side course on that day.

EXPECTS HIGHEST STEEL PRICES.

President Campbell of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube company predicts generally higher steel prices due to the coal shortage when the industry gets going again. Chicago steel mills have advanced quotations on finished products to a general minimum of $1.90 per hundred pounds, with prompt shipment bringing $2 and higher.

TRUTH SERVICE
CHICAGO COAL MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION
FULL WEIGHT

Look for this mark of Integrity—the Symbol of Truth, Full Weight and Courteous Service to the Public.

The Chicago Coal Merchants' Association, organized more than twenty years ago, is a large group of Chicago Retail Coal Dealers, associated to maintain definite business Principles in the retail coal business.

These Principles are Truth, Honesty, and Fair Dealing—watchwords of real service. Any dealer falling short of these Principles is subject to dismissal as a Member of the Association. Only those who live up to a policy of square dealing with the public are entitled to display the Mark of the Association.

These are outstanding forms of the Association's Policy in relation to dealings with the Public:

No profiteering. Full weight guaranteed.

Delivery of the grade and the kind of coal ordered by the customer.

Maintenance of a credit bureau to protect the honest patron against the "DEAD-BEAT."

The Association does not now have, never has had and never will have anything to do with the fixing of coal prices, nor has it ever discriminated against any class of the coal-buying public.

The Association invites any person with a grievance to communicate with it, and it will exert its full influence to right the wrong.

On Making WANT ADS PULL More Inquiries

THOUSANDS of people write thousands of Want Ads every day which cause the sale and exchange of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of goods, service, commodities—everything which man has use for. Advertisers simply make a list of the important details of their offer, then they list these factors in the order of their importance, then they write their Want Ads. Although more than 3,000,000 replies are distributed annually at The Tribune Want Ad Post Office in response to box number Want Ads alone, sometimes, through faulty construction, a Want Ad does not pull as many inquiries as it should.

Inquiries mean dollars to advertisers. More inquiries mean more dollars. Therefore The Tribune has conceived the idea of making every Want Ad pull for its advertiser the greatest possible number of inquiries of which it is capable. Offers vary greatly. Differences in requirements are many, and that is the reason it is necessary to tell enough about your offer. Then the reader will know whether yours is the offer for which he is looking. The Tribune's new booklet, "Wording a Want Ad to Make it Pay." is a complete exposition of the well written Want Ad. It is free to those who ask for it. The edition is limited. Send for your copy today!

The World Outside

by Harold MacGrath

FIRST of all young Collingswood Jeremiah Bancroft inherited $7,000,000. Then the storm tossed into his house a stranger who made him the fantastic offer of an adventure after youth's own heart, with thrills involving the possibility of battle, murder, and sudden death, in return for $10,000. And then, to cap the climax, out of the tempest came a beautiful woman, lost in the storm, to claim his help. And Jerry was only 24 and tired of a humdrum existence!

What do you think of that as the beginning of an ideal story of action, love, revenge, and mystery? It is the beginning of Harold Mac Grath's latest novel, "The World Outside," which is The Chicago Sunday Tribune's new Blue Ribbon serial, starting in this section today. Of course you've read "The Man on the Box," "The Lure of the Mask," "The Carpet from Bagdad," "The Luck of the Irish," and other stories by Mr. Mac Grath. Well—"The World Outside" shows him at his best, which means that you'll be under his magic spell until you've read the last word.

Mr. Mac Grath, who is 51 years old and lives in Syracuse, N. Y., has nearly two score popular novels to his credit and is one of America's leading authors, with a huge reading public that will hail his most recent work. Begin it now!

FIRST INSTALLMENT.

Out of the Storm.

THE man on the wrong side of the window—and to be on the wrong side of cosy windows was this man's lot—forced the umbrella down against his head and shoulders to prevent it from being blown out of his hand, for the autumnal gale was full of unexpected lulls and rages. Under his left arm was a leather portfolio, snugly held. From time to time he teetered and balanced himself against some extra heavy blast. The covering of the umbrella gave forth a low, continuous rumble.

He stood at the side, at the very edge, of the square of yellow light, shot with sparkling rain, that poured into the darkness, brightly as it passed the window sill but filtering quickly into a dull gray mist above a dull green panel of grass.

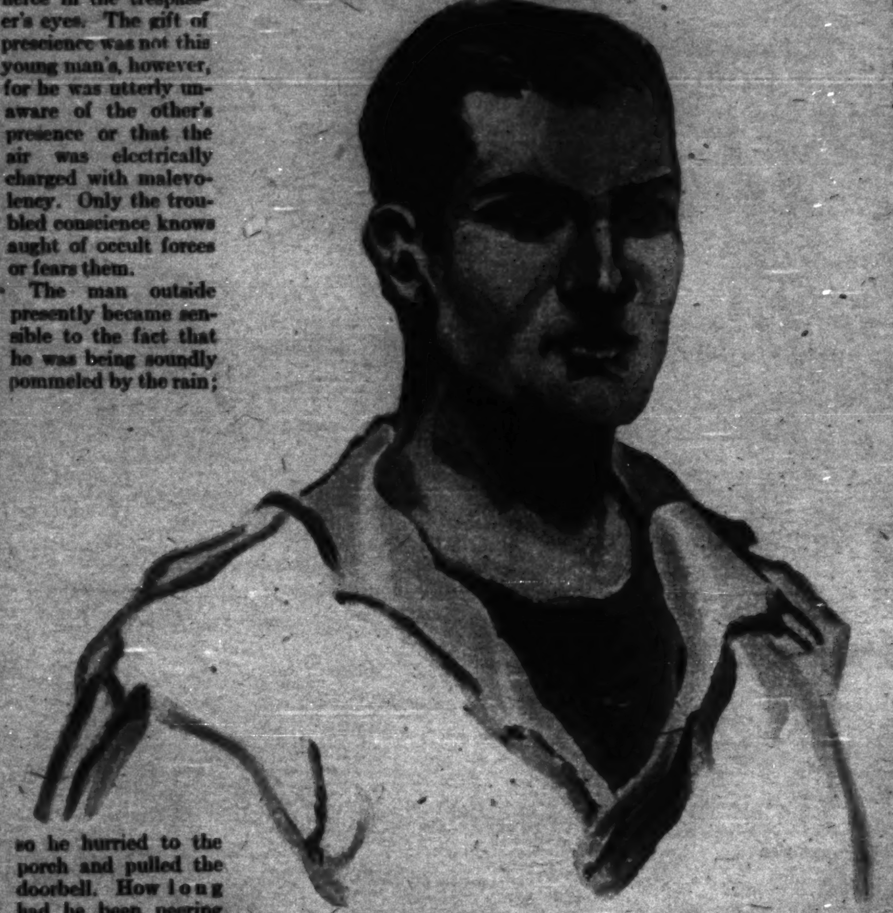
The window through which the trespasser peered—and he was a trespasser, since, for the present, he preferred the window to the door—was in a mean house on a mean street in a mean village, a village which was moribund but which refused to die, out of spite, probably. The clapboards of this particular house were dingy gray. The porch drooped forward, like the shoulders of a man sick of life. The picket fence might easily have been mistaken for the teeth of some prehistoric monster that had lived not wisely but too well, so full of gaps and raggedness was it. The green blinds alone retained some of their pristine freshness; or it might have been that the rain had temporarily varnished them.

The trespasser could see clearly every move, every expression of the young man on the cosy side of the window; and beyond him, shelf upon shelf of books, and above these, ancient Ming, Green Kaga, Mari, and Cloisonne. The house was like a human wreck, filled with wonderful memories: something like himself. Memories! Memories that nothing could smother, neither time, nor place, nor action.

His sudden convulsive grip of fury, combined with a blast from the tempest stronger than any preceding, broke the shaft of the umbrella where it entered the handle. The black canopy whirled aloft and away, drunkenly, and vanished like some evil bat out of Brocken.

It seemed incredible that the young man within, where all was so cheerful with lamp light and fire light, was in no wise disturbed by the fire of malevolency that burned so fierce in the trespasser's eyes. The gift of prescience was not this young man's, however, for he was utterly unaware of the other's presence or that the air was electrically charged with malevolency. Only the troubled conscience knows aught of occult forces or fears them.

The man outside presently became sensible to the fact that he was being soundly pommeled by the rain; so he hurried to the porch and pulled the doorbell. How long had he been peering into the window? Twenty minutes, perhaps. Uncomfortable but necessary, since the opportunity freely to study the young man was one not lightly to be ignored. And what had he learned? That the boy had a mobile countenance and, when alone, permitted his thoughts to print themselves distinctly upon it. But would the countenance be mobile under the observation of strange eyes? That remained to be learned.



The $7,000,000 Heir.

THE young man sat reading at a flat top desk, upon which stood a student's lamp, its nickel oil container tarnished beyond redemption. The upper half of his face was partially masked in shadow, but easily remarked; his chin and mouth, in the free light, were noticeable for the squareness of the one and the whimsical tenderness of the other. He read from typewritten sheets which lay flat upon the desk. Sometimes he would prop his elbows and rest his jaws upon his palms; or he would slump in the chair, his arms dangling, stare into a darkened corner, and upon this Rembrandt background paint a dream, a pageant in scarlet, perhaps, or one in silver and gold.

Outside the wind howled and rain slashed. But it was warm and cheerful in this room. Logs burned briskly in the fireplace. Shelves and shelves of books lined the four walls: books with red backs and blue, hand tooled in silver and gold, whole calf and limp Morocco—hundreds of them. Atop the highest shelf were a dozen exquisite vases, ancient China and Japan. The desk, a heavy nutwood, was beautifully carved; precious Florentine.

To the young man, so thoroughly absorbed in his typewritten sheets, neither the desk nor the pottery signified anything to his mind beyond the fact that he always gathered a mysterious pleasure in beholding them. That these objects were out of place in this room he instinctively knew, but he could not have told why he knew. The floor was covered with an ordinary rag carpet, worn at the thresholds and under the desk; the wall paper was old and faded, peeling in corners; the woodwork—that free of the oak shelves—was dull white mottled with broken blisters.

"Seven millions!" the young man said aloud, in that tone of suppressed awe one employs in cathedrals, where echoes lie in wait to confound us if we raise our voices. "Yesterday, seven cents, figuratively speaking; today, seven millions!"

All day long he had repeated these phrases, or similar phrases, and still he could not escape from the notion that he had been bludgeoned, that he was the victim of a waking nightmare such as prizefighters suffer when they are knocked out. For months he had known, and it had not troubled him to any extent; but today he had come into the actual possession of these millions. Not once had he danced, sung, shouted, as he should have done, being only twenty-four. Instead, his particular and immediate sensation was that of catastrophe. Not impending catastrophe, but the concrete actuality, here and now: seven millions, and not the least idea what to do with them! Dollar by dollar, it would take years to count this fortune. It was as incredible in computation as the distance between Jupiter and the earth. He was at a nonplus.

HE folded the typewritten sheets and put them into a drawer. Then he reread the remarkable letter he had received that morning from the attorneys for the estate, Snell & Pride. A hint of foul play. But what could he do, what could anybody do, aside from accepting as conclusive the examination by the physician, that death had been due to heart failure? There was a suggestion that his father might have been scared to death. But who could prove it?

Collingswood Jeremiah Bancroft, Esq:

Dear Sir: This day you come into the possession of your inheritance, absolute and incontestible, according to the terms of your father's will. And now we feel it our bounden duty to acquaint you with the supposedly peculiar circumstances attending your father's death. Personally, I do not consider the circumstances peculiar; but our head clerk, Mr. Johnson, insists that you be acquainted with such facts as he has in his possession to put you on your guard should it turn out that your father did have an enemy of murderous inclinations.

It seems rather late in the day to put the supposition before you, but we believed it best first to investigate thoroughly but quietly Mr. Johnson's suspicions. The result is we are exactly where we started from. If your father had an enemy, violently inclined, we found no trace of him.

My opinion is this: that some crank, who could not get his business to your father through the regular channels, sought the window via the fire escape platform. The shock of seeing him enter was too much for your father's heart. But that the stranger was some one aware of your father's delicate condition and vengefully frightened him to death strikes me as bosh. Your father had been warned to avoid any shock, not to run after street cars or to enter crowded trains.

More than twenty years ago he went through a severe siege of pneumonia, and his heart has been in a precarious condition ever since. His town physician here not long ago declared to me that Silas Bancroft was a marvel to medical science. Logically he should have died years ago.

He had his office in ours for many years, and by so doing kept out of the turmoil, though always within immediate touch. Only his broker knew his telephone number, which was ours. He was as inaccessible as the Matterhorn. So excitement eddied around but never touched him. Hence his prolongation in the affairs of men.

Your father came in that morning with his usual abstract air. He went directly into his office, which adjoined mine, and locked the door, which was his invariable custom. Only upon our signal was the door ever opened before the lunch hour. Your father was without fear, and the locked door was to prevent such intruders as might be lucky in passing the barrier from annoying him.

The wastebasket was filled with crumpled and torn scraps of paper. We found nothing which would indicate a threat, however. But the date on his desk calendar was circled heavily, as if something momentous was to take place. But that might have been some anniversary.

Johnson was alone in the main office at noon. Suddenly he heard high voices in your father's office. A prolonged Ah!—then silence. Johnson ran to the door and signaled. There was no answer. Then he ran outside to the fire escape and got into your father's office through the opened window. Your father lay sprawled over his desk, dead.

Now, Johnson may have been mistaken. The voices may have come from the alley, for all the outside windows were up, the weather being mild. There were truckmen and stevedores in the warehouse alley. None of them had heard voices or seen anybody on the fire escape. Not even Johnson. And there you are. If they had not seen Johnson on the fire escape it is credible that a stranger might have come and gone without being observed.

Even if Johnson's suspicions have any foundation, there is nothing to be done in law. If your father had an enemy of the violent type it is strange that in all these years I had never heard of it. Of course, with a silent man like your father, you never can tell. We shall always wonder why your father emphasized the date on his calendar. It may have been the windup of some deal, or some anniversary. He was totally out of

FARRAND'S LAST ROLE

from which all vitality had gone. "I had made up my mind to stay here all summer and act the rôle of Harry Farrand, so that you would come to see me, so that our friendship would go on. My slipping back was play acting, my man of mystery attitude was play acting, my isolation was play acting. Nobody wrote to me and nobody came to see me, so I had adopted the rôle of sick hermit to save my pride. When you wrote I didn't reply. I was still keeping to my rôle of sick hermit. But I had a better reason. I was afraid. I thought you would come once or twice and then get bored and stop. I didn't want that to happen. I couldn't have endured it. The memory of you meant too much to me. For at least"—and now his voice grew more natural—"I haven't deceived you in one thing. You were the princess—you are—you always have been and always will be. Even when I was an unwashed cub I used to hang around the garage till I found out when you were going off in the car, and then I was sure to be where I could see you go. But—could I tell you that? What had you and Dan Farrand's son in common?"

Again he stopped, but still she did not speak.

"So when you came," he continued with an effort, "I play acted even with you. I had not planned to—I give you my word. But when you took me for Prof. Farrand's grandson, when you talked of the old garden, the temptation was too great. Don't you see? It gave me my chance to hold your interest for a little while. What chance would Dan Farrand's son have had? And remember you were the girl with the blowing hair, that I did all my acting for when I was a boy, whether or not you were anywhere around."

Again silence lay between them.

"I have not lied to you," she heard him resume. "I never claimed to be Prof. Farrand's grandson. And I knew every inch of the old garden," he explained dully, "for I had explored it a thousand times. Harry Farrand used to let me in on the sly. We could always keep out of the old man's way. That was one of our adventures—pretending he was the ogre and avoiding him."

HIS voice seemed running down from fatigue, but he doggedly kept on talking, as if now he feared to stop, lest she blast him with her reply. His face had taken on a look of grim acceptance.

"So now you know. You would have known today, anyway. I had realized that I must tell you the truth. I couldn't play act—with you—any longer. One does not play act with the woman one adores. O, yes, I'm going to say it, even though I am a beggar and Dan Farrand's son. And—I can't say I'm sorry I did—what I did. In my rôle as Harry Farrand, the rôle you yourself offered me and which I grasped, I stepped into your life for a few weeks. You will admit that I—I—took no advantage of it. I didn't even venture to live in the present. I merely played my part. I gathered and piled up my memories. By God, I'm glad I did it," he broke out fiercely. "Those memories, at least, you can't take away from me."

HE broke off short, leaned forward to stare at her, stretched out a desperate hand that failed to reach her, and uttered an inarticulate sound. Both her hands were covering her face, but between the fingers he saw tears. He recoiled as abruptly as he had reached out to her. Those hands, he thought, were shutting him away; those tears were the tears of hurt pride. Even as such he could not bear them.

"Don't," he begged, hoarsely. "Don't—don't cry. I—I can't bear it."

She took her handkerchief from her pocket and wiped her eyes.

"I'm—I'm an idiot," she stammered.

"You're an angel. Don't be sorry for me. Don't think you have broken me. Try to realize what you have really done for me. I have acted all my life, but now I have played my last role. I shall leave here as soon as Brown lets me go; and somewhere, somehow, I'm going to make a man of myself—in memory of you. So, you see, you have done all you tried to do for me, and more." His voice grew desperate. "Please, please don't cry again!"

Once more Miss Belden wiped her eyes. Then she spoke in a voice whose delivery was greatly handicapped by the childish gulps with which her words came out.

"I'm—crying—because—you—were—so lonely—and—you—are—so—stupid," she brought forth, "with—your—self-reproach—and your—your—valedictories. I—I want—to—see—you—go—to—work. I want—to—to help you. And—and so will dad. Who cares whose son you were? I don't. Dad won't. And I don't see why you should think I am a snob. Those medals and wounds of yours make you anybody's equal. And—and—if you don't say some nice things—this—very—minute about that girl with the blowing hair——"

"Come here," cried David Farrand, in a new, triumphant voice. "Come here this instant or I'll—I'll tip over this wheel chair!"

She came, and the two clung together, inside the wishing ring.

OUR ESCAPE FROM THE BOLSHEVISTS

a bolshevik office, or a club, or a commissaire's dwelling, or a bolshevik dance.

The Danish Red Cross, which had been helping us with small provisions brought from Denmark, had had no representative in Petrograd since last June, when all the members, with the exception of Dr. Nansen, had been arrested and taken to Moscow. Many people felt the pangs of hunger after this charitable institution had ceased to exist. For months before, men and women in the best society, people who had been nearest the emperor, went there and waited in line for their small portion of flour and different things in the way of tinned meats and preserves. They were a pitiful sight, hungry faces, some women crying. An old lady once came there dressed in a mantle which had been made for her a few years before when she had been stout. It now dragged at least half a yard on the ground; she was nothing but skin and bones.

Now even this godsend had ceased and starvation was keenly felt by the nonbolsheviki in Petrograd. One saw the saddest sights every moment of the day. I have been often stopped in the street by men whom I knew to be gentlemen, begging in the name of the good Lord to give them a small piece of bread. I myself was half starved. There were days when, forced to go out and look for food, I would stand by the side of the wall of some house, where in olden days I had dined in splendor, and cry like a fretful child from sheer weakness, and there would be many around me doing the same thing.

The trams were overcrowded with unwashed, hungry people, quarreling, shrieking, crying. It was like Dante's Inferno. Pet dogs, abandoned by their masters or mistresses could be seen sitting up begging the passers-by for something to eat, and later on one would see the same little animal lying dead behind the railing of some house where it had crawled in to die. Horses died in the street and often over their dead bodies women were cutting away pieces of meat, while a dog would come out from inside of the same carcass or gnaw at it from the opposite side. Famine in the autumn and winter of 1920 stared every one squarely in the face.

The moment arrived when further stay became a matter of life or death for us in Petrograd. My husband was getting weaker and weaker each day; something energetic had to be done and without delay if we wanted to remain alive. We had considered several plans of escape, which had to be abandoned for some reason or other.

It was all the more difficult and dangerous, as we had to carry with us a few valuables which could be sold abroad to provide means for our future existence.

ONE day we finally heard of a Finn who, for a large sum of money, would take us over the frontier and could be relied upon. Miriam went to see him. She had first to pass the scrutiny of his trusted men before she was allowed to speak to him. When she told him that we were three souls who had to get away he said he could only take two at a time, and offered to take Miriam and me that afternoon at 5 and my husband two days later. We reluctantly agreed to a plan which would separate us, but thought it quite impossible to go first and leave my husband behind, ill as he was, so it was arranged that he would be the first to go and he was to leave that same day.

On the spot we began getting him ready. He had to be disguised to look as much as possible like a workman, with peasant felt boots and old clothes, with two old potato sacks hanging in front and behind him, in which he carried his few belongings and part of our valuables. His nerves were completely run down and we had to wash and dress him, we more dead than alive ourselves.

Miriam went with him to the station. I said good-by to him at home, not feeling at all sure that we should ever meet again. Two days later, which seemed months, it was our turn to leave. We worked all day vaguely selecting and packing what we could take with us in the way of clothes and a few saleable things. Our money had to be taken out of different hiding places, everything large had to be abandoned.

AT last we were ready to start, disguised as peasant women, dressed in old clothes with shawls over our heads and high Russian felt boots. It was bitterly cold, 30 degrees R. of frost. We made a little muff to put the dog in and Miriam, with her dog under one arm, started to drag our four heavy sacks on a sledge to the railway station. I was taken there by a woman friend of the Finn and met Miriam in the waiting room of the station. The woman put the two sacks on to my back so that there could be no suspicion that we were not two peasants going into the country in search of food.

Standing and lounging all around us were armed soldiers. What if they should become the slightest bit suspicious and search our sacks? In our nervous state, we naturally expected every moment that our plan would be discovered and we again arrested. The woman left us and went to buy our tickets. Returning with them, she told us to take the first train that was to leave and go to a certain station which she named where the Finn would be waiting for us half a league behind the station in the forest.

We waited for that train in a dense crowd, on the coldest of platforms, for hours with those heavy sacks hanging on common cutting ropes around our necks, leaning against the gate through which we had to pass to the train. When the train arrived at last and the gates were opened, the crowd rushed forward, pushing and struggling, leaving us far behind, as I had not the strength to run with those heavy sacks. Consequently, when we reached the train, every inch of space in the coaches was taken. I was on the point of fainting away. Miriam was half in despair; she half cried, "All is over, mother, if we do not get that train."

We had just time to climb up into the baggage car; she forcibly dragged me in; we stood like sheep—and the train started. After about one hour's journey, all the time standing up in this packed car, we got off at the appointed station, walked straight out, not looking to the right or the left, and took the road leading up the hill to the forest.

It seemed to me endless miles from the station. We walked on and on for an eternity with our loads growing heavier and heavier on our backs. The snow was deep, it was getting dark, and by the time we reached the outskirts of the forest night had closed in. We were exhausted, cold, and downhearted, afraid that in that uncanny forest we should be robbed and have to go back to Petrograd.

THE WORLD OUTSIDE

itself, I agree. The Great Adventure company dramatizes incidents already invented by popular novelists. And there you have the milk in the cocoanut. You are not permitted to choose the subject; for it is only the Unknown that breeds adventure."

"Sir, my compliments, as they say. I feel myself tempted. Not because the thought of adventure lures me, but because I have an investigating mind; and when I am confronted by the mysterious, I like to solve it. I suppose that's the contract. Let me see it." Resignedly, Bancroft held out his hand.

"Not the contract, but the prospectus."

Bancroft read the document from beginning to end; and he came to the peak of his astonishment. The man was really telling the truth: he sold adventures! The prospectus read as the man talked—exceedingly well. Nothing was overdone, nothing hidden. Bancroft searched in vain for the joker; there was none.

"Well, I'm flabbergasted, as we say here in the village." Bancroft laid the prospectus on his desk.

"That's natural enough. On the face of it it does look incredible. But Marconi was incredible thirty years ago. You buy a book, you sit here under the study lamp and enjoy yourself. Laughter, pathos, thrills, love, mystery; they are yours. But the moment you close the book, the characters vanish. You become an outsider; you have no souvenirs. With us you live what you read. Simple."

"How are the payments made? Ten thousand in advance?"

"No. One thousand down and nine thousand upon the successful conclusion."

That was the final touch; while Bancroft was not inclined, he was converted. He got up. "I have read a great many books; I've kept in touch with the world through the newspapers; but this beats all I ever heard of." He walked the length of the room and back. "What about battle, murder, and sudden death?"

"Battle—the daily fight of man for food. Murder—of our illusions. Death—when does it cease to walk beside us? Don't you get a thrill out of the idea?"

"If it weren't for the ridiculous side I might. But madmen to conceive a business like this and fools to act upon it!"

"When human beings put on wool they absorbed something of the sheep."

"Now you are challenging me to take a dare," said Bancroft, briskly. "That's childish. No one ever forced me or cajoled me into what my ordinary common sense rebeled against. On the other hand, I'd be a liar if I refused to admit that you have aroused my curiosity considerably."

"Young man," said the adventurer coldly, "if you are marked, all the precaution in the world will not save you. If you are fortunate, you will die in bed, of old age. That's all there is to it. You remember the old lines—

He either fears his fate too much,
  Or his deserts are small,
Who dares not put it to the touch
  To gain or lose it all.

"What's the use of all this money, if you can't squeeze some fun out of it, you, who have lived so frugally? Will you spend it in riotous living, or will you endow hospitals and research laboratories? Or will you let it grow until it topples over and smothers you? In a little while you will no longer be a free man; you will become the slave of these millions. I offer you a temporary escape. Have you ever played? I should say that you had not. Well, shortly you will never have the chance; you will be a drudge all your life."

"Let me ask a question."

Beauty Secrets Revealed.
Anna Q. Nilsson, the Popular Actress Tells How To Instantly Have a Beautiful Rosy-White Skin and Complexion

"The secret of beauty is the proper care of the skin," says Miss Nilsson, the popular star. "It only requires a few moments' time and any one is more than paid for the little effort it takes. In the first place the skin should be kept scrupulously clean. Use a good cleansing cream (Liska cold cream is splendid for this purpose). Follow this by bathing the face with warm water, then rinse with cold water and dry thoroughly with a coarse towel. After this apply Derwillo. It instantly beautifies the complexion and its continued use makes the results permanent."

Derwillo takes the place of face powder, as it stays on better and is wonderful for a shiny nose, oily, dark, sallow skin, tan, wrinkles and other facial blemishes. Just make this test: Put Derwillo on one side of your face, then look in your mirror and compare it with the other side, you will need no further argument to convince you that nothing beautifies like Derwillo.

It imparts a youthful appearance and if you would keep your complexion at its best all the time, make Derwillo a part of your toilet as you now do face powder and note the favorable comments of your friends.

There is nothing like Derwillo to beautify your hands and arms and to protect them from roughness and ruddiness, which always follows exposure to sun, dust and wind. It is guaranteed absolutely harmless on the most delicate skin and will positively not stimulate or produce a growth of hair. Give it a thorough trial and you will never be without it. Accept no substitutes, as there is nothing "better," "just as good," or "just like it." Derwillo comes in three shades, flesh, white and brunette.

Note—Ask your druggist about Derwillo and he will tell you that he has never sold any toilet article which has become so popular in so short a time. This is due to the satisfaction it gives. It is guaranteed by every druggist or department store to give complete satisfaction or they will refund your money. If you don't like it take it back. Could anything be fairer? It is sold at all toilet counters.

"GETS-IT"

The National Corn Remover

Remove Unsightly Corns

Hard or Soft—Big or Little—Old or New

An unsightly corn or callous on the bare foot of a bathing girl is an inexcusable disfigurement. Whoever reveals such a blemish or endures, for even five minutes, an aching corn or tender callous has only herself to blame.

Never was pain stopped so quickly as soreness in a corn is banished by "GETS-IT." Just as cold water instantly quenches thirst, so does two or three drops of "GETS-IT" bring to the tenderest corn complete relief and then makes that relief permanent by peeling the corn off—in one piece, root and all. Costs but a trifle—everywhere.

Lux for washing dishes

Quick, rich, gentle suds—won't redden or roughen the hands

Three times a day in the dish pan—strong soap—any skin would redden or grow coarse.

But now your hands need not show tell-tale traces of dish washing. Lux won't redden or roughen them. It is just as easy on your skin as it is on your silks or woolens. The pure flakes bubble into a rich lather as gentle as a fine toilet soap.

Use Lux for china, silver and glassware. It leaves them sparklingly clean. And it rids your hands for good of that three-times-a-day-in-the-dish pan look.

One package of Lux will last for 44 dish washings—more than two weeks. Start using it today. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

Just a tablespoon to a pan. A single package does 44 dishwashings—all the dishes for more than two weeks.

FARRAND'S LAST ROLE

Blue Ribbon Fiction

by Elizabeth Jordan

The Story of the Unhappy Prince Hidden Behind the Barriers, the Invading Princess, the Wishing Ring, and Sundry Other Matters

"AND—wait a moment, my dear—there's just one thing more!"

Seemingly the one thing more was in the untidy and overcrowded top desk drawer of the chairman of the Lest We Forget committee, for that lady was now urgently disemboweling the drawer in an obvious search for something. Mrs. Huntington, even her nearest friends conceded, "had no system"; but they hastened to add that "her way with our poor boys was simply wonderful."

She now brought forth and casually dumped on the polished top of the desk an apple, three note books, a large shopping bag, two surplus paper weights, a calendar, an engagement pad, a brush broom, a small box of pens, a mass of unanswered letters held together by a brass clasp, a carton of peppermint filled chocolates, a check book, an ivory paper cutter, and a leather bound almanac dated two years back. Among this collection she excitedly fumbled, at first with pathetic hope, then with rising disappointment.

"Now, isn't that odd?" she asked the girl who, having risen to go, had paused at her words and was patiently waiting beside her. "I was positive my address book was in that drawer, yet I've taken everything out and it isn't there."

The girl made a suggestion.

"Possibly it was crowded back by the other things. May I try?"

She thrust a hand and arm into the far recesses of the drawer and removed them covered with dust; but both women disregarded this slight detail. Miss Belden had also drawn forth a small, red covered book which the chairman promptly grasped with the crow of an exultant baby.

"I knew it was there!" she boasted. "I always know exactly where my things are, though of course I can't invariably put my fingers on them the instant I want them. Good-by, dear. You're a heaven sent comfort to me. Most of the other girls seem to have lost all interest in our poor boys, now that the war is so far behind us. But I feel I have an army with banners when I think of you. The way you have given your time and your vitality, not to speak of your money, is simply marvelous."

Florence Belden, who had busied herself at a stationary wash stand in the corner of her leader's office, turned and smiled affectionately, but rather guiltily, as she democratically dried her hands on the office towel. She was more touched by the older woman's tribute than she cared to show, but she felt she did not deserve it. She had done something, of course, but so much more she could have done had been forgotten or postponed. Even as Mrs. Huntington talked Florence had been planning to take advantage of that lady's absent mindedness, and escape before the chairman remembered what she had meant to ask her to do. The other's praise killed that ignoble impulse. Probably, Florence gloomily reflected, it had also killed all her own afternoon plans.

"There was something else you had in mind for me," she recalled to her leader; "something that made you look up the address book. What was it?"

"O, of course!"

Mrs. Huntington, who had dropped the book among the other evidences of a busy life, retrieved it again with some difficulty and hastily turned its pages.

"Let me see," she mused aloud as she did so; "I've forgotten his name, but I think it begins with F. Possibly I will recognize it if I see it. M-m-m. Fagan, Forrest, French, Feeney"—her lips moved almost noiselessly as she recited the long litany of names. Florence watched her with full understanding. She knew now the special service required of her. It was without doubt to take some discouraged, maimed young soldier under her special wing, to write to him, to visit him in the hospital, to arrange for outings and other entertainment if he proved physically up to them. She had done a great deal of such work and she enjoyed it. Sometimes the boys were very interesting. She hoped this one, whose name began with F, would be likable and responsive. Occasionally the poor youngsters who had suffered so much had passed the point where the attention of even a beauty and a belle, such as Florence Belden, appealed to them—but usually she won them over in the end.

"AH, here it is! Farrand—David Farrand. Twenty-seven. M-m-m." Mrs. Huntington flashed an eye down the Farrand record, to refresh her memory, then gave the result to her companion in a brisk summary.

"He has been in hospitals ever since the armistice, and I wouldn't dare to tell you how many operations he has had. Now, at last, he is getting better. In fact he is almost well, but he can't be made to realize it. He is still a little 'hipped.' I am sure you could help to brace him up. The point is—let me see—what was it that made me pick him out for you? O, yes. He is from your home town, but everybody seems to have forgotten him. He hasn't had a letter or a visitor for months."

Miss Belden's delicate eyebrows rose. Her "home town" was the great eastern city upon which she now looked out through the windows of Mrs. Huntington's office. She had almost forgotten the small western city of Weyo, where she had been born, where her father had made his millions, and from which he had moved to New York ten years ago, bringing his motherless daughter with him. Since then, though Florence had ignored Weyo, Henry Belden had seen to it that Weyo should not forget the Beldens. He had given it the Belden library in memory of his wife; the Belden hospital, in memory of his father and mother; Belden park, in member of himself. Once a year he drifted back there, for a few days of duck shooting in the region and a chat with his old friends.

Florence had never gone back—not that her memories of Weyo were unpleasant, but because the recent full and wonderful years in New York were sponging off the pale impressions of her childish days. She had been a tremendous success in the east. She had developed in a way that made Henry Belden's eyes shine when he thought of it. She was as democratic as he was. She had hosts of friends in every circle of life. Incidentally, she ruled her father absolutely, and wholly without his knowledge.

She was not thinking of all this now. Her mind was busy with the name of Farrand. It rang in her memory like a distant but full toned bell, vibrating pleasantly in the avenue of the years. Yes, indeed, she remembered a Farrand—two Farrands. The first had been a slight, stoop shouldered, rather sweet faced old man, a retired professor of chemistry from some western college, living on a pension in a small but charming house on the outskirts of Weyo. There had been a garden—it was rather strange how vividly all these details were returning to her; and the second Farrand was a grandson of the first. The boy had been away at school most of the year, but home in the summers with his grandfather. He had been all of sixteen or seventeen, dark, and large for his age.

TO Florence, whose fifteenth birthday was yet to come, he seemed a young man, barely less remote than the heavenly bodies to which her teachers were urgently beginning to direct her attention. She had heard much of him; had been fascinated by passing glimpses of him; had even dreamed of him; but she had never met him.

In the summer time, when he was home, she was often absent, visiting schoolmates or traveling with her father. And at all times the Farrands kept to themselves. Heavens, how all the details were filling in! The old professor had lived alone, save for a man servant; there had seemed no one belonging to him except his grandson; both appeared to be hermits; and—last, yet most important of all—they had gardens whose beauty was celebrated by the few who saw it. That garden had slept behind high brick walls, and to the childish imaginations of Weyo it took on infinite romance and mystery from the fact.

As a child Florence had dreamed of it by the hour—of what it held and of the old man and the boy who alone seemed privileged to enter it. The boy had become to her a sort of enchanted prince, held prisoner in the mysterious garden by a magic spell. Yes, indeed, she remembered young Farrand. He had been Weyo's most stimulating contribution to her youthful imagination. She remembered that while she was still at school her father had told her Prof. Farrand was dead, that his grandson had gone to France, and that she had been, even after the long interval, a little thrilled by this news of him.

She did not realize how long she had been silent and unhearing, but she caught the tail end of what evidently was the peroration of Mrs. Huntington's address.

"They say he is very unapproachable—wants to be left entirely alone. Of course that isn't good for him. And as soon as I heard that he came from Weyo, your old home, I was sure you would take an interest in his case."

Florence banished her crowding memories.

"I will," she promised. "Dad will, too, I am sure. Perhaps, in the conditions, it would be well to make haste rather slowly. I will write him this afternoon, and send him a basket in a few days. Then I'll motor out to the hospital in a week or two, after he has grown reconciled to seeing me."

"Floy, dear, you're such a comfort!"

Mrs. Huntington exhaled a breath of relief that almost blew from her desk the entire impressive collection upon it. Florence rescued the lighter articles, restored them to their owner, and left the office, her thoughts still busy with her new protégé. Strange that the breath of her one childish romance—for it had really amounted to that—should come back into their life after a whole decade. The reflection intrigued her.

THAT afternoon she wrote David Farrand a charming note, incidentally mentioning that they had once been fellow citizens of Weyo. Almost immediately it became clear that the fact did not interest him. He ignored the charming note. She had been prepared for this, and after a few days she wrote again, sending him a large package of new books and magazines.

The gift brought a formal six line response from one of the nurses. Mr. Farrand, it appeared, wished to thank Miss Belden for her interest. He was not able to read much at present, but later he hoped to be. Miss Belden sent another letter, with a basket of hothouse fruit, a box of cigars, and the inevitable cigarets. To this impressive offering the same nurse responded with a seven line note of acknowledgement. Mr. Farrand, she explained, appreciated the pleasure the gifts had given his fellow patients at the hospital.

The firm young jaw of Florence Belden set a little as she read the brief document. It seemed clear that Farrand was still as remote as in the past. Ten days had been wasted in the preliminary skirmishes. It seemed high time for more direct measures, if he really needed help in returning to the living world. The June afternoon was surprisingly hot, but she ordered her motor car and drove forth to make her first call on the recalcitrant young warrior. Her fighting blood was up. Whether Farrand knew it or not, he needed her—he needed her friendship and her help. She would have been less than intelligent if she had failed to realize how greatly, since the armistice, hundreds of other broken and heartsick boys had benefited by both. The enchanted prince must be released from his new prison. Surely she could help that good and necessary work along.

At the hospital she received the smiling welcome which always met her there, on every side. Her boys, she was told, were desperately homesick for her. They had not seen her for almost a fortnight—quite long enough, one of them pointed out, to undo all the good of her previous visits. Miss Belden looked up her special protégés, finding them singly and in groups, some still in their beds, trussed up in elaborate apparatus, others stretched out in invalid chairs in reading rooms or on the long verandas circling the hospital, a few hobbling about the grounds. When she had chatted with and scattered her gifts among them she sought out her now stanch friend, the head nurse, and expressed her wish to meet young Farrand. The austere Miss Greeley, who had recently humanized under the charm of the girl's face and manner and the real value of her work, reverted to her former aloof personality with a suddenness that amazed the caller.

"Farrand does not receive visitors," she briefly announced.

FLORENCE gazed at her askance. Whatever the degree of her liking for outsiders, it was the patient who counted with Miss Greeley. If Farrand desired to escape visitors, here, clearly, was one who would protect him from them.

"I know—but don't you think you could persuade him to see me?" Miss Belden's voice held the cajoling notes of a child begging sweets from its nurse. "Mrs. Huntington thought you might. And you know," she reminded the other woman, "I've had some luck with boys who thought they didn't want to meet strangers. Besides, when it comes to that, Mr. Farrand and I are not really strangers. We are from the same western city, and I have known about him since I was a little girl."

"You have?" Miss Greeley was human again. "You are the only one who does know, then," she volunteered. "He is our mystery man. He never talks about himself or his home or his past experiences. All we know about him is his army record, which is fine (he has half a dozen decorations), and what is on his hospital charts." She stopped, obviously for a moment's reflection, while the idol of the boys waited respectfully for the result of her meditations.

"He really ought to be stirred up a bit," Miss Greeley suddenly conceded. "Dr. Brown was saying so only the other day, and talking about the need of a new influence to hasten his convalescence. Yet if I go and ask him to see you, I am sure he won't do it—and you are the one person who could help him, if any one could," she handsomely ended.

Florence dropped her pose of the beguiling child and became briskly businesslike, addressing the other from the secure pedestal of past success.

"Suppose you take me straight to him and leave me there?" she calmly submitted. "He can't do more than order me out, and I don't imagine he will do that. I won't stay more than a few moments this first time—just long enough to break the ice so I can come again. Where is he?"

WHILE the head nurse pondered the suggestion, her mental processes being slow when directed outside of their usual orbit, Florence cheerfully drew her forward in what she hoped was the line of the young man's retreat.

"I suppose you have wheeled him outside somewhere?" she asked.

"Yes. We keep them all out as much as we can, of course, though it's really cooler inside in this unseasonable heat. Who would think it was only the first week in June? But he has a pet spot among some trees—I think we'll find him there——"

She had yielded and was briskly leading the way. The visitor followed her along the veranda and across a lawn toward a appeared with his tray. Contrary to all custom, he bore on the tray the evening paper. He took Marie's coffee cup, but that did not stir her from her frozen attitude. The tinkle of the spoon which Gibbs, also contrary to custom, dropped on the floor, did startle her. She looked at him with wide vague eyes.

"I beg pardon, Miss," Gibbs said, "but have you seen the evening paper, Miss?"

For the first time since she had come to Kent house Gibbs had asked her a question. If Marie had been in a condition to notice, she would have been astonished. "No——" she returned, vaguely. She looked, without seeing, at the folded paper Gibbs had placed on her knee.

"There is a little notice of yourself there, Miss—of your adoption—just under the paragraph on Mrs. Brant-Olwin," and Gibbs indicated exactly the "paragraph on Mrs. Brant-Olwin," by pointing at it. "I have been in the service of the family for fifteen years, Miss, and I make free to offer——"

Just what Gibbs was making free to offer Marie did not hear, for she had read the first lines of the paragraph on Mrs. Brant-Olwin and had risen as if lifted by wings. She passed through the library and then the hall and through the outer door like a winged Mercury. From the window, Gibbs watched her flight into the park and smiled.

MONSIEUR—Breck?" Marie said.

Breck turned with a convulsive start. He had been looking at the ruins of the cottage. But only for a few moments, for he had come down slowly through the park and Marie had flown. He was so astounded he said nothing.

Marie came nearer, into the clear moonlight. Her black curls were loose on her white shoulders, her cheeks vivid, brows knitted, intent upon a purpose. "I ran—to ask you—a question——"

"Yes?" Breck said vaguely.

Marie came close. He looked white, expressionless. "Why is it that you leave—Kent house, monsieur?"

He looked less blank; the color began to darken his face. "Because—I can't endure it here!"

"Because you love Mrs. Brant-Olwin and she is to marry Monsieur Wakefield," tensely.

"I love Mrs. Brant-Olwin! No!"

Marie's whole being relaxed into utter relief. She breathed words that sounded like a prayer. She bent her head, her little hands lifted to her breast, palms together, the attitude of prayer.

Breck looked at her and the muscles in his cheeks began to twitch. Suddenly his hands settled on her shoulders. "Marie! That man was not lying then—just to hurt you? You have faith in me?"

She looked at him with shining eyes. "It is true. I have loved you from that first day—it was ugly jealousy that made me strange. It was for your sake that I drove him away without exposure to your family."

"And I have loved you! I've feared for you and agonized over you—I thought you had turned away from me forever!" His face was a-quiver, like a glassy pool whose stillness has been suddenly broken by a fallen branch. He caught her up, held her as one would a rescued child, clasped close, rejoiced over. He kissed her, eyes and cheeks, lips and throat; there were unguessed depths of emotion and devotion in Breck Dunbarton-Kent, as in Bella, and a world of love and tenderness in little Marie. Her arms about his neck held him strained; for a few moments life ended—then was born again.

BRECK put her down lingeringly. "I want my arms about you!" he said. He stripped off his coat and laid it across a gap in the wall of the cottage. He lifted her up and sat her on her throne, full in the moonlight; put his arms about her and laid his head in her lap. "I have longed and longed for you—ever since the time you said, 'Ah, monsieur, now I know why you look so sad!' Little one, I was a thief because I didn't know any better than to steal. You understand, don't you—just ignorance, just wrong training? That reform school! Why, it was only a place where I was made to feel that I was an outcast. And the preacher who took me from it and used me to clean his stable and chop his wood—at prayers each day he used to ask God to have mercy on the sinner in their midst and he would as soon have touched a toad as my hand. But my uncle! He brought love and understanding. I had no moral sense—I barely knew how to read and write. He was a big hearted man and a courtly gentleman. He told me my mind was good and he brought me books. He said I had in me every good quality he possessed, and that he hoped I had none of his bad ones. He made me laugh and feel happy. Whenever he came he shook hands with me. I loved him—I worshiped him. When they let me out he took me to the Maine woods with him, to hunt and fish. Think what that was to me, a gamin grown into a jailbird of eighteen! He sent me to a boys' school—he told me he would send me to college, if I had it in me. I was older than the other boys—I worked like mad to catch up—ambition was born in me. Then he put me in college—how I worked! Then, my first vacation, he brought me here. He told me then who I was, his nephew, a Dunbarton-Kent. For hours, here in the cottage, we talked together, and I longed and resolved to become a worthy Dunbarton-Kent. I loved Kent house—I was a Dunbarton-Kent, part of it. Then I lost—him——" He caught his breath in a sob. "It was—hard. I loved him so."

Marie stroked his bent head. "Do not tell me any more, dear one—I know everything, and I understand."

"I must. I've longed so to tell you. Aunt Bulah wrote me to go on in college and try to do well. She hadn't much faith in me, and I worked the harder because of it. I stood well in college. But no one knew my real history. Then West did to me what he said. Every one shunned me—I went through hell. I went to France to get away from it. It helped me, though. It got worked into my marrow that Germany's cause was that of the world thief. When they took me prisoner, I felt that they imprisoned me because I had done right. There's a vast difference. And I lived through it somehow, to come back to Kent house. It was my dream, to come back to the home of my family and make myself respected and loved. Aunt Bulah took me in for my uncle's sake. But West was here—that——"

MONSIEUR! Breck, do not!" Marie begged.

He calmed instantly. "I will not, dear. I should not denounce, for I know them so well, those who have allowed an obsession to eat away their souls. And who knows? When he has reached the depths, perhaps even he will find his soul. It was my uncle's belief that there is no depravity that cannot be cured, that the spark of regeneration lies in every criminal, however great his criminality. My uncle's belief is the right one—it redeemed me: optimism vivifies life, pessimism destroys it.

"But, Marie, there are some things I must tell you. West was right in some of his deductions: I did threaten him; I did know he visited Mrs. Smith's house secretly; I did think her a bad woman, even before I became certain that she was the thief; I did watch her house and search it several times without results. But, Marie, about some things he was wrong—he judged me by himself. I loved you throughout, utterly and unselfishly and without hope.

"For your sake, I tried to frighten him, but he held the key to his secret and I did not—he himself was Mrs. Smith. I thought him the kind of man who would mislead you if he could. I did want you to leave Kent house, but for your own sake, not for mine. I couldn't tell you what was the trouble at Kent house. I was so desperately afraid if you were friendly to me they would think you were my confederate. I knew that at first you pitied me, I loved you for coming to ask me what ailed me, you child with a big heart! I forgot caution and gave you the little spaniel, you were so lonely and distressed, and I begged you to leave Kent house. But I couldn't explain—it wasn't safe. I had to behave like a dumb fool, or something worse. Then I was afraid my gift would get you into trouble and I took the spaniel away. I gave you the pistol, both as a protection and a warning.

"Then they took you into Kent house and I knew some one had told you my history, as they regarded it, and that you abhorred me. But I went on trying to guard you. I followed you and West about and I made him understand that, if he hurt you, I'd kill him. Just once the misery I was in got the better of me—that morning at the cottage. You were accusing me of meeting Mrs. Smith, his woman, and I felt that no matter what I said, you would not believe me. I flung at him the thing I would have given anything to believe, that you had and always would have faith in me.

"AND Marie, I did not make one friend. He knew my history; he knows many things he is supposed not to know; he's an observer and, too, he knew my uncle. Gibbs was my friend. He helped me—he used to let me in and out of Kent house. He played his part well. He kept the servants under his thumb; he even used you to frighten them, making them believe you were a detective sent by Mrs. Brant-Olwin. But Gibbs liked you and watched over you. He did not like West—he used to tell me that he was certain that you did not care for West, but that you loved Aunt Bulah. When I decided to leave Kent house and give all my time to finding the thief, Gibbs promised to watch over you. I went the night before the party and the next afternoon Gibbs telephoned me that Mrs. Smith had come back. But for Gibbs, I don't know what I should have done.

"And, Marie, Mrs. Brant-Olwin has been like a sister to me. You see, I knew Ward Wakefield well when we were in France. He is a brilliant young lawyer and I thought that should I be arrested, he would help me, so I went to see him. I told him nothing about my affairs, but he told me, as a great secret, that he was engaged to Mrs. Brant-Olwin and that they meant to surprise society. They are very much in love with each other. While she was in Florida, she used to make stolen visits to New York to see him, and it was on one of those visits to his office that you met her and she sent you to Kent house, and not as a joke. She has told me that you were so young and pretty and she knew that Aunt Bulah would take an interest in you. Little she knew to what she was sending you! Gibbs had telephoned me to come back and, as Ward was not feeling well, I took his place at the dinner. I wanted Mrs. Brant-Olwin to like me—I liked her as soon as I met her; she is wholesome, genuine. I was Ward's friend and I knew their secret, and that made her my friend, too, but, Marie, from beginning to end and world without end, you have been my love. I hadn't a hope left, I thought you still abhorred me, you scarcely looked at me or spoke to me, and I couldn't endure it. And though I have my arms about you now, it still seems a miracle! But I have made you cry—I didn't mean to make you cry, dear——"

Marie's thoughts were as disjointed as her words. "It was such suffering for you! I suffered, too—my heart ached and was broken—I wished these last three weeks to be dead. Mr. Gibbs is a noble man; so long as I live will I love him. Purposely he sent me to you tonight, by showing to me about Mrs. Brant-Olwin in the paper. I know it now. In the past, which will never come back, I was wicked with jealousy over a bad woman that did not exist. Never again will I be jealous like that without reason!"

A GRAVER man than Breck would have succumbed to Marie's jumbled English. For the first time in her knowledge of Breck, Marie heard him laugh, clearly and happily. He laughed and held her the closer, and grew grave again. He dried her tears by kissing them away. "And I'll love you with all the love and gratitude there is in me as long as I live. I'll be true husband to you, Marie."

It was a glimpse into the future, and Marie said softly, "And you wish most of all to live with me here in this beautiful Kent house—as did your uncle?"

"Yes!" he said deeply.

She put her arms about his neck. "Then lift me down from here, please—Breck—and we will go and tell it to Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent at once. I think she suffers alone in her room."

From the library window, Gibbs saw them coming up through the park and into the full moonlight, hand in hand.

Marie did not know how long she sat alone in the big room, but Gibbs knew.

the market at this time; so his death could not possibly benefit any one but you.

Come into town as soon as you possibly can and we'll talk it over. Besides, the banks will be wanting your signatures. Respectfully yours, GEORGE D. SNELL.

BANCROFT slipped the letter under the blotter and went back mentally in review. Never, so far as he could recall, had there been evidence on his father's part of perturbation or of anxiety. He himself had always bolted the doors and windows at night, never his father. So then, if there had been an enemy, his father had gone about his affairs unafraid. Off to New York at six in the morning and back at six in the evening, regularly as clockwork, never staying in town over night.

He was inclined toward Snell's theory, that the head clerk's ears had tricked him. Among his father's papers he had found no lead of any distinction, one that would point to a personal enemy. So far he had discovered nothing but results, no beginnings, no data as to how this or that deal had had its inception, only the consummation thereof.

There was one slip of paper, undated, that rather puzzled him: "Paid Kennedy in full." This was heavily underscored, as if his father had been in an emphatic mood at the time. But in all the papers that alone was the one sign of emphasis. What had provoked this emphasis—anger or satisfaction? At any rate, whoever Kennedy was, he had been paid in full. Still, he would take the slip into town: Snell might recollect this man Kennedy.

There was a queer angle to the whole business: his father, living in this cheap old house, in a village which despised him, when he might have lived like a prince; the office within an office, as if he were hiding. A miser. And yet, as he recalled his father's countenance, it was not the pinched, thin lipped visage of the miser, the accepted type: it had been pale and thin but serene. A quiet man, who spoke but little, who had no loves, no fads, no friendships.

What was the meaning of all these beautiful books, these lovely vases there, this table at which he sat? He had never seen his father touch a book or handle a vase. What, then, were these things doing in this house, which threatened to tumble apart whenever a storm buffeted it? There was some manner of riddle, but no visible thread by which to unravel it.

But nearly seven millions, all his own, to do with as he pleased! He shook his head and cleared the desk. It was too elusive.

THE jangling of the wired doorbell broke in upon these cogitations. He rose, hurried into the hall, and opened the door.

"Mr. Bancroft?" asked the visitor.

"Yes."

"May I have half an hour of your time?"

"Hang your hat and raincoat on the peg and come in by the fire," said Bancroft, hospitably.

The visitor divested himself of his hat and raincoat and followed his host into the library. He stepped up to the fire and dried his hands.

"A good deal of weather, I should say."

"And mighty dark for five o'clock," was Bancroft's comment. "I imagine it's a big storm off the coast, as the blow comes from the southeast. Dry out and take a chair. Selling something?" he added, returning to his chair.

"Yes." The visitor, who had recently been the trespasser, exposed a shoe to the flames. When this began to steam, he repeated the operation with the other shoe. Then he walked to the chair opposite the desk, deposited the portfolio at the side of the chair, and sat down. "Yes, I have something to sell. But whether I sell it or not depends upon your imagination."

"Ah!" The young man neither smiled nor frowned; his expression was pleasantly neutral. "Imagination, eh? Well, I'll listen."

"Very good. I represent a company which on its face has the air of absurdity, because the notion is novel and unusual. But once upon a time the Wright brothers were a pair of fools to their neighbors. Well; then, to put it baldly, I am here to sell you an adventure—such as might befall the hero in a modern novel. As another might come to sell you lightning rods or a policy on your life, I offer you a contract for battle, murder, and sudden death." The visitor spoke soberly, though there was a merry twinkle in his blue eyes.

The words enveloped Bancroft with a sense of unreality; or rather they developed this sense which had been stirring continuously for recognition throughout this extraordinary day. He had fallen asleep; he was dreaming, the stranger was the unsubstantial creation of rudderless thought, the stuff of dreams. And yet there was the gale rattling the green shutters; there was the drumlike roll of the rain as it drove against the window panes; he could see the water run down the glass and through this double film the occasional flash of lightning that revealed the houses and trees, grotesquely out of shape, across the village street. (It was late afternoon in October, and the black storm, with the visage of night, while mildly warm and smelling of dead leaves and withered grasses, was gaining in fury.)

All this was real, then! There was the wood fire, too, the shifting of pleasant rose and shadow on and over the book shelves. He could hear old Mrs. Horne, the housekeeper, puttering about in the kitchen, preparing the evening meal. Tangible sounds and pictures, positive, real—elemental strife outside and ordinary human activities within. Battle, murder, and sudden death—for sale! The man had uttered the phrase as calmly as though he were offering a bag of potatoes. Hysterical laughter welled into Bancroft's throat, but he choked it down. It was a joke of some kind; but he wished the man had chosen some other day for it. It wasn't fair. His poor brain had been something like a whirling pinwheel of fire all day. He couldn't stop any thought long enough to analyze it, so many others were crowding and jostling for the right of way, and making no use of it when they arrived. Still, he would dig out the joke. The diversion might steady him.

The stranger, then, had heard that Collingswood Jeremiah Bancroft had this day become a millionaire. There was something remarkable in this timeliness. He had, in the process of offhand deduction, drawn the heir as a country bumpkin; the principal object of his visitation was to deplete as far as possible the said heir's bank account. How he had learned that this was the day was worth digging into. So, with some effort, Bancroft forced his thoughts into a receptive mood.

The world had not heard yet; there had

THE TWINS RECEIVE A PET.

BY WM. DONAHEY.

THE Lover twins wanted a pet. They caught a black ant, which they kept for a while, but one day it got out of the bottle in which they kept it and disappeared. The poor little fellows cried almost all day and their father promised to get another pet for them. One day he caught a caterpillar for them, and the little chaps had great fun with it. They made a house for it out of a small bottle and fenced in a nice big yard with fly screen. One morning the twins found the caterpillar dead and once again they were heartbroken.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," said the Old Soldier, who was most fond of the twins, "we'll see if we can't get a pinching bug for you. They get mighty tame and they are about as good a pet as a dog. They will watch the house just like a dog and after you have chained one up for a while he will get to know you and follow you around like a pet dog."

"O, goodie! Goodie!" cried the delighted twins, and, pulling off their Boy Scout hats, they both stood on their tiny heads to show their joy.

The Old Soldier and the Indian spent several days hunting for a good bug, and one evening they found a big, young one, which they promptly captured. They fastened a tiny chain around the bug's neck and brought it up to the Lovers' bungalow, where Mr. and Mrs. Lover and the twins were sitting on the porch. The twins were nearly wild with excitement, but their mother was quite upset with the appearance of the bug.

"Land sakes!" she exclaimed. "I don't want that horrid bug around here. It's liable to bite one of the children, and besides I won't have it around trackin' up the porch and chewin' up brooms and mop sticks. You can just take it right away."

The twins set up such a wail and begged so hard to be allowed to keep the bug that their mother finally consented to let them have it for a while.

"You have got to keep it out of the house and, mind you, I don't want it trackin' on the front porch," announced the little mother, decidedly. "And you have got to take care of it and water and feed it, too."

The twins were almost beside themselves with joy and the next morning they asked their father to make a bughouse for them. Mr. Lover found a small paper box, and in one end of it he cut a small door. The box was then set beside a bush near the back door of the bungalow and the bug's chain was fastened to an iron ring, which had been secured to the bush. In a few days the bug grew quite tame. It would take food out of the twins' hands and it soon learned to follow the little fellows around like a dog. The twins soon found the bug liked to play, and they had great fun playing tug of war with Fred, which was the name they had given him. The bug would take a rag in his big pinchers, and when the twins would catch hold of the other end of the rag, he would growl and shake his head much like a dog. He was so strong he could almost always pull the twins all around the yard.

Mrs. Lover soon became quite attached to the bug, for he had become useful. Fred hated ants, and he would not let an ant come within sight of the bungalow. This pleased Mrs. Lover greatly, for she had been much troubled with ants and it was a great relief to know she could set a pie out to cool without feeling that it would be carried off by the ants.

"It's such a relief to have Fred around," said Mrs. Lover one afternoon as she and the Lady of Fashion sat on the front porch sewing. "He's such a good watch bug, and I feel perfectly safe when he is around and I'm alone in the house."

been no inquisitive reporters wrenching the bell wire. Even here in the village there was only a vague rumor of a fortune, more and more discredited as time went on because the heir had not gone forth with a flourish to the big city—to dissipate the money in riotous living, as heirs were wont to do in the movies. How then, by what uncanny means, had this suave stranger acquired his information?

Here would be the first of that caravan of adventurers who are forever wearing down the paths to rich men's doors. The first marauding Uhlan to cross the frontier; tomorrow, a troop of them; later, an army, persistent and unending, once it began to move toward the old homestead. To loot him if they could!

HE was still dazzled; his head was still seething with a chaos of indirection, of indecision, even after all these months of exact knowledge. Millions, and still having not the least conception what to do with them. Dreaming, perhaps, of a few hundreds, hoping for a little to give him a foothold in his later struggles; and then—millions! What was a boy, brought up in the country, who had spent all his life in the country, to do with so vast a fortune?

One moment there would be wild exultation over this unprecedented liberty, this call of spring to the drab, pent up youth in him. In this desk was a packet of bills totaling ten thousand. He had demanded this sum of the attorneys (paid over readily enough against his note) to convince his wavering senses that he was not the victim of some absurd trance.

O, the maddening impulse to rush forth into the city, to walk the sparkling night in quest of adventure!—to befuddle his feet with strong drink and his senses with women! But always the immediate reaction to such thoughts was a troubled distaste which drew him to the book shelves.

Ten thousand alone would have made him happy; but seven millions, seven colossal grindstones, one atop of the other, and all upon his untried shoulders! The vast responsibilities entailed dumbfounded him quite as much as the limitless possibilities. He stood in the Room with a Thousand Doors and knew not which to open. What with his simple habits he would not be able to fritter away a tenth of the income. The fortune would go on piling up, more and more formidable, more and more oppressive.

Four and twenty; he was pitiably green. What did he know of the world outside, beyond what he had learned from books and newspapers and the military camp (which had not been particularly elevating)?

Miser's son! Miser's son! Yah! He could hear it echoing down the years. Once the children had thrown stones at him. He had never found out why. Children, always little wolves for cruelty, had taken literally some careless words of their elders. That was the one solution he could deduce.

But for yonder magical shelves, he would indeed have been a country bumpkin—such as this stranger no doubt considered him; else he would have hesitated to come with so utterly preposterous a scheme to wheedle money out of Silas Bancroft's son. Battle, murder, and sudden death—for sale!

The stranger did not look like a fool or a madman. That was a well shaped head, soberly gray; the brow was intellectual, the blue eyes merry and rollicking. In the faintly upturned corners of the mouth there seemed to be a smile in ambush, ready to leap forth at a given sign. It was, however, the odd pallor of the skin that blurred the salients. Bancroft had never before seen such color—or lack of it—on a human countenance. He roved about mentally for a comparison, but failed.

"YOU don't look crazy," said Bancroft, breaking the long pause, during which the stranger had shown no sign of restiveness. Men who have something to sell are generally patient.

"Naturally!"

"Well, how about me—do I look crazy?"

"No. I imagine that you will have inherited some of Silas Bancroft's caution and shrewdness."

"And yet you come to me with a proposition like this!"

"Ah! Great philanthropists are always misjudged. I came to you because yours is the type [illegible]."

"I wonder if that's complimentary?" mused Bancroft, eyeing the ceiling.

Instantly the merry blue eyes became as hard and sinister as gun metal; but even as Bancroft's gaze swung down, the mask of merriment fell into place.

"Complimentary, indeed. I shouldn't have approached you at all but for the fact that I knew you to be a young man with a lively imagination, a young eaglet in a cage." The stranger pyramided his digits, his lean chin resting upon the index fingers. "What is there so amazing in my proposition, when these days we fly in the air and rove under the sea? Instead of an airplane, I offer you an adventure. In fine, for a nominal sum—a nominal sum for a rich young man—I will undertake to pluck you out of the rut of commonplace and give you a taste of life—swiftly moving adventure, thrills, escapes, far countries."

A blind swung in, banging upon the rusted latch. The report was as sharp as that of a pistol. A singular tableau was formed: neither the stranger nor his involuntary host started or shifted his glance.

THE stranger nodded approvingly.

"Very good," he said.

"What is?"

"The state of your nerves, your sang froid. Most human beings would have jumped at that sound."

"O, that? I am used to it. Those blinds are always banging in the wind. That makes me think. I must call in a carpenter; there's a lot of odd jobs around."

The other laughed. But there was an undercurrent to this laughter that Bancroft could not grasp. It was positively alien to the merry light in the steady blue eyes.

"I was certain I should make no mistake in approaching you. To be sure, you are amused, skeptical, astonished. But why not a company to sell adventures? Men sell everything else, including themselves and their women. There isn't a normal human being alive who isn't athirst for an adventure, with all the ramifications, plots, and counterplots. There's no fun adding up figures and darning socks all your life. Our clients are naturally under thirty. After that age we begin to think too much of material comforts."

"And what's the price of this adventure you promise so easily?"—willing to humor the man in order to learn what his real project was.

"Ten thousand dollars"—tranquilly.

This time Bancroft did start perceptibly. The sum named was exactly that hidden in his desk. Could it be that he had been seen counting the notes? But that was scarcely possible since he had always exacted this entertaining pastime in the seclusion of his bedroom, curtains drawn and door locked.

"Ten thousand is a lot of money," he said, recovering, "to pay for an adventure which must of a certainty be cut and dried. You're talking nonsense. I'm no fool." Bancroft gestured toward the book shelves. "There are twelve hundred books there, and I have read about all of them, some many times over. So at least I've been up and down the world in fancy, and have my share of common sense."

"My dear child," said the stranger, in gentle mockery, "the point is, you would never know whether the adventure was real or cut and dried. The moment you sign the contract, the adventure begins, up here," went on the persuader, touching his forehead. "At once you'll be wondering whence it will come and when. A smile from a pair of pretty lips, perhaps; a knock on the door at midnight. You'll be glancing into every face, peering into every dark alley. Out of this humdrum, which you have known without variety, you will be thrust into a world of thrilling suspense."

Bancroft felt in his soul that if the man had come with oil stock he would have bought it. The voice was as a concrete thing, able to reach into the mind and clutch the imagination. He was a good deal astonished. To propound an absurdity so well that it was given the aspect of plausibility required genius of a kind.

"I begin to see," he said. "Would you mind telling me how you learned that I have inherited money?"

"Through the probate courts, which we watch continually. A large sum of money is left to a young man like yourself. We investigate thoroughly before we approach the prospect. We never bother with the wickedly wise young men of the cities who

FARRAND'S LAST ROLE

But you will invite me into it sometimes, won't you?"

"Let's go in now," she said.

At her request he described the garden in detail. It was an enchanting place—quite as mysterious and romantic as she had pictured it. The old man, it seemed, had lived his life there—pottering around it all day long, eating his meals in the open, reading and studying, even sleeping there, in a screened, flat hammock, on summer nights. Listening, Florence seemed to see his thin shadow even now, flitting in and out among the trees.

They were side by side on a stone bench in the sunken garden, discussing a favorite fairy tale, when her eyes fell on her wrist watch. She shook her head reproachfully.

"I've stayed an hour," she exclaimed. "Shocking! Miss Greeley won't let me come any more if I do this sort of thing. And my boys will think I have deserted them."

She made the last statement with clear deliberation. He was to understand that she had forever dissociated him from the mere rank and file of "the boys." They two were old friends. She rose from the camp chair and stopped at his side for a moment. Among the black hair on his temple was a narrow line of white. The impulse to touch it was almost overwhelming. She set her teeth.

"Is there anything I can send back to you?" she asked. "Or any message I can take into the hospital as I go by?"

"No, thank you," he said, almost absently. His expression, too, was almost absent. If pique had not been too trivial an emotion for that big moment, she would have indulged in it. He was so obviously resigned to her going! Her heart went down, down. Had she found him too late?

"I am just coming back slowly from the old garden and the kid I was," he said at last; and he added with a sigh that ended in a smile: "It's a long journey."

RECALLING these words, and all his words, during the drive home, Florence realised how whole heartedly he at least had played their little game. Throughout that hour he had kept her in the past. They had talked much about the garden—so much that she had a finished picture of it in her mind's eye. They had talked of childhood games and joys and make believes; of favorite tales. But, she realised it now more fully than then, throughout that hour she had been his prisoner behind those walls. Not once had he permitted her to get outside of them, even for a moment. Possibly he never would. It was almost as if he had immured himself beyond reach of the hands and voices of today. And yet those boyish moments had been so warm, so human, so wonderful.

She wondered if, at any time during the interview, he had been in pain. Certainly he had shown no sign of pain. He had not asked her to come again, but, of course, she would go again, and soon. How soon, she found herself thinking, could she go—with dignity? All rules, of course, went down where the boys were concerned. One overran them with entire impunity, mounted on the swift steed of one's good intentions. But it was different with Farrand! One could not overrun him, even when one desired to, and—one did desire to.

When she visited him the third time, after a dragging interval of four days, she carried out to his chair in the grounds a great mass of flowers and dropped them into his lap. It had seemed rather an absurd thing to do—but what could one offer a sick soldier who certainly did not smoke or read, and who apparently did not eat? She saw at once that the flowers pleased him. He fumbled among them with his thin hands and raised a cluster of them to his face.

"These old fashioned white roses might have grown in the garden. Don't you remember the two rows of white rose bushes I told you about, that lined the east walk?" he asked eagerly. "I don't suppose one could find roses like those nowadays, with the delicious old time perfume. In fact, I don't remember that any rose I have had since had any perfume at all."

The words, so casually spoken, made her turn away and, for a long moment, look out over the waters with unseeing eyes. Farrand had the look of a man whose flowers had all lacked perfume.

He pinned a rose in his tunic, kept a bunch of white roses in his hands, and looked regretfully at the mass left in his lap.

"It's a pity to let those die," he said tentatively. "They ought to have some water."

She turned back to him and shook her head.

"No, they have come to die for you. I brought a lot more. Those are in a big pitcher of water at the head of your bed. These are for a fairy ring—to put in a circle around your chair and make a wish over."

"I have not lied to you," she heard him resume. "I never claimed to be Prof. Farrand's grandson."

He smiled. It was the smile she had begun to watch for hungrily, the boyish, charming smile under which his dark face seemed to flash into light.

"Who is going to make the first wish?" he asked.

"You are—first. Then I shall make one, too."

"All right," he said. "But I'll have my work cut out for me, thinking up a wish."

His face had clouded again. She looked at him, heavy hearted and solemn eyed.

"It would be nice if we could both make the same wish," she ventured.

"What would that be?" He asked the question almost indifferently, watching her as she now rose and began to drop the flowers around him, but seemingly feeling no great interest in the pretty game.

"That you may soon be as well and strong as you ever were, and"—she hesitated, then resolutely brought out the rest—"that your ambitions may be re-awakened!"

He turned and gave her a sudden, sharp look.

"Just why do you say that?"

The tone distressed her, but she held her ground.

"Dr. Brown tells me you are really amazingly clever—that you could do anything you attempted if only you would work up enough ambition to make an effort. But he said another thing that disturbed me very much," she rushed on, before he could interrupt. "He added that you had been getting on beautifully up till a fortnight ago, but that since then you have slipped back until you are as indifferent and almost as impossible to influence as you were when you came. Every one has noticed the change, but he says he can't account for it. That made me feel—unhappy. For, don't you see, I came in just about that time, to help you—and perhaps you were right. Perhaps you needed to be left alone. Possibly I have done you more harm than good. That's why I am making the ring—and my wish. When I have done it, I am going to leave you in peace."

ALL the time she talked she had been making her floral ring, glad of the opportunity to do something that made it possible to keep her face turned away from him. But now the circle was finished. She came and sat beside him on the little campstool that was already as much a part of his pet resort as the wheel chair on which he sat.

"Do you think it would be peace?" he asked, quietly.

"I don't know," she said, trying to speak steadily. "I don't know anything about you. You have never told me anything, you know, except about the garden."

"So you have decided to drop me?" He asked the question slowly, his dark eyes unswervingly on her face.

She leaned forward, picked up one of the flowers in his lap, and slowly pulled it to pieces.

"Please don't put it that way," she said at last, in a voice so low he had to lean closer to hear it. "Surely I have shown you how much I wanted to help, and—I have let you see how much I have enjoyed the effort. But I did thrust myself in—there is no denying that. I think," she hesitated, but went on bravely, "I had subconsciously convinced myself that you were still the enchanted prince I used to think you were when I was a school girl. I wanted to save you from the ogres of pain and loneliness. But, apparently, I have merely made things worse for you—or something has. I believe Dr. Brown holds me responsible, or he wouldn't have spoken as he did. So—you understand——" She threw away a handful of petals with a gesture of finality, and raised her eyes to meet his—"I really have no choice."

FOR a long time silence lay between them like a substance which neither could remove.

"I wish," he said at last, "I could find the words to tell you what I've got to say. But—I can't!" The final admission was almost a groan. The sound brought her upright in her chair, her brown eyes seeking his, which did not meet them.

"Surely," she then said, "you know there is nothing that you can't say to me."

His eyes met hers and held them.

"You mean that?"

"Of course I meant it."

She waited, watching his face. He drew a deep, shaken breath.

"The second time you came here," he began, obviously forcing out the words, "you spoke to me about Ted Fiske. Do you happen to remember Dan, the chauffeur his father had so many years?"

She felt chilled. What had the Fiske chauffeur to do with what he and she were discussing?

"Dan?" she repeated, confusedly. "Why, why—yes. He drove me thousands of miles, I suppose. I was always going off on trips with Ted's mother and sisters. Why do you ask?"

"Do you remember any of his children?"

Florence moved restively on the camp stool. She almost believed this was mere purposeless digression till once more she squarely met his eyes. Their expression brought her answer, in a rather breathless voice.

"I know he had several boys."

"Don't you remember any one of them?"

She might have been on the witness stand, at the mercy of a prosecuting attorney. The sternness of the question—and something that lay beneath it, and stretched and yawned—stimulated her memory.

"There was one—there was one——"

"Yes." The word came at her like a bullet.

"There was one who was always acting—I mean always playing a part among the other boys."

"Yes," he said, curtly. "Tell me all that you remember about him."

"Sometimes he was a king," she went on, unsteadily; "sometimes a beggar, sometime a prince, sometimes a highwayman, sometimes a red Indian. Whatever he was, he took the part seriously and kept it up for days and weeks at a time. He made all the other children accept it. The whole town talked about him. Some people thought he was—a little queer. But his father was proud of him. A year or so after we left Weyo I heard that Dan had sent the boy east to college——"

For some reason she could not go on. Her throat and lips felt dry.

"Do you remember the youngster's name?"

"He was always called 'The Play Actor' by the boys and girls. I'm not sure of his first name, but I think it was—was——"

Again her voice failed her.

"It was David. The chauffeur's name was Farrand, though he was no kin to the old professor with the garden. That boy's name was David Farrand, Miss Belden, and—he is 'play-acting' still!"

There was a long silence which the girl could not break. The young man went on.

"That's why I slipped back this last fortnight," he explained, in a queer, flat voice

The Romance of a Million Dollars

by ELIZABETH DEJEANS

FINAL INSTALLMENT.

The Clouds Roll Away.

MARIE was right: West had gambled on his last chance and had lost. Her scorn of Breck had rung true, her revenge triumphant was ringingly clear, assuredly certain. West had shrunk: a high handed, perfectly assured, nonchalant gamester, a conscienceless, clever man of the world, an artist and actor of talent perverted, West Dunbarton-Kent changed, while they looked on, into the hunted criminal. His body seemed to shrink and his stature lessen; his shoulders lifted and rounded, his neck shortened, his jaw protruded, and sharp lines narrowed his forehead; his eyes grown furtive and gleaming peered from a face that belonged rightfully in the rogue's gallery. The metamorphosis was more astounding and far more painful than the superficial change wrought by a disguise removed; that which had been a superb woman changed into an erect, arrogant, well featured man; this was a revelation of mental deformity, revolting, sickening.

He was looking from this side to that, swiftly considering. He moved sidewise toward the black opening in the paneling, glancing into the darkness, glancing over his shoulder at the cottage door, listening the while. He looked at none of them, yet observed them with fitful glances. Then he decided: with a crawling leap, he cleared the far end of the table and ran across the room, catching up some of the scattered bills as he went. He climbed the book shelves as one would a ladder. He opened a casement window and crawled through it. They all turned and watched him; his body disappeared; for a brief moment they saw his hands clinging to the sill—then they disappeared.

MARIE said softly and sweetly, but in a voice they all heard. "It was necessary. He had but one fear—the law." Then, suddenly, she drooped against the table and, before Breck could reach her, she slid to the floor, a huddled heap.

Willetts had sprung towards her, but Breck had leaped the table and had reached her first. He lifted her up. "She has fainted," he said, more to himself than to the others. "I ought not to have let her do it, but it was the only way."

He held her carefully, guarding her oddly twisted, hanging arm; stood upright and, over her head, which drooped against his breast, he looked at the three who had crowded close; at Haslett and Willetts, who did not know what to do next, at Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent, who was saying in quivering agitation: "Give her to me, Breck—they may come at any moment. My poor child! And you——" She looked old and broken, her head shook spasmodically.

"No one is coming," Breck said briefly. "She was acting—she beat him at his own game and without any one's help. You're indebted to her for your release from that man. I've suspected Mrs. Smith for some time. I've searched her house several times. I've watched it night after night, under difficulties. I searched it again tonight. She was not there, and there was no clew to the jewels. I went a second time to her bedroom and found it locked. There were movements and I knew she must have come by some secret way. When there was silence again, I knew she had gone, and then it came to me. I got into the room and searched every inch of it and I found it, a concealed stairway down into the cellar. Then I heard voices—there was a gap in the cellar wall and only the paneling between me and the cottage—the paneling was a door which was closed. I opened it in time, thank God!" He had spoken rapidly; he gave his orders tersely. "Gather up that stuff on the floor, Willetts, and I'll tell you what to do with it. And you, Mr. Haslett, look after my aunt—she's ill. The trouble here is a dislocated shoulder, I think. I didn't notice till she used her left hand. The sooner we get to the house the better."

One afternoon, three weeks later, Burton Haslett walked briskly along the lower road until he neared the entrance to Colfax Hall. Then he walked more slowly, his eyes keenly observant. The old brick pile was being repaired, there was scaffolding across its front and piles of lumber on its unkempt lawn.

He went on then to Kent house entrance, stopped there, and stood gazing. Mrs. Smith's house had disappeared; where it had stood was a heap of blackened debris.

Gibbs, looking utterly immune to either tragedy or comedy, intent on his Roman nose, as usual, received the Dunbarton-Kent lawyer and relieved him of his hat and cane. "Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent will receive you in the library, sir."

MRS. DUNBARTON-KENT was seated, from winter habit, before the fireplace whose only warmth now was its shining brass. She looked older, her huge cheeks sagged more, and, at times, the jerking of her head, a relic of shock and prolonged nerve strain, was noticeable. "So you chose to walk from the station—I suppose you wanted to see the ruins again," she said with her usual abruptness. She eyed him keenly. "You've had some word from him, of course. I knew it as soon as you telephoned that you were coming out."

"It's good news," Haslett said quickly. "He's out of the country—he writes from Paris."

"He wants money, I suppose?" she said grimly.

"Yes—an allowance. He has seen our New York papers and he realizes Miss Angouleme tricked him."

Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent's red brown eyes flashed. "Not one cent! Notify him that we've turned him over to the police."

"That was Breck's advice, but we wanted your sanction." Haslett took a paper from his pocket. "Breck advises that I send him this letter: 'Your communication received. I am instructed to notify you that the Dunbarton-Kent family has given your present address to the police. Mrs. Smith is charged with theft and arson, and you are implicated with her. Wherever you are, she is supposed to be. Furthermore, competent witnesses have made statements which have been appended to Richard Dunbarton-Kent's will. So far as your family is concerned, you have ceased to exist.' I agreed with Breck that it is the only way to deal with him."

Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent nodded. "Take all hope away from him. He'll gamble away what money he has with him, then he'll drift—out. It's the end he deserves. I mean to put him out of my mind."

"That's right, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent. Willetts, Greene, and Jones all are pleased over what you have done for them. Willetts is the only one who knows the whole truth; Greene and Jones think as the public does, that West was entangled with Mrs. Smith and that he ran away to escape the scandal. Willetts will never speak unless the Dunbarton-Kent interests demand it. He's trustworthy."

"Breck says he is, Haslett." She spoke Breck's name with respect and contrition.

There was the same note in Haslett's confession: "I am a poor judge of character, your husband often said so, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent. I should have judged Breck more correctly. I apologized to him, but he cut me off: 'Forget it,' he said. 'My uncle taught me the wicked folly of being dishonest. I have never had any desire to steal from that day to this. We will not refer to the matter again.'"

"The same thing he said to me, Haslett, when I begged him to forgive me. 'Don't think about it, Aunt Bulah—we'll never speak of it again. Just remember my uncle was a good judge of character.' He's been wonderful, Haslett, the way he has taken charge of things here, advising me what to do about Bella and Colfax, and other things. I feel like weeping from shame and pity when I look at that carven face of his." Her lips quivered too much for her to go on.

Haslett looked grave. Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent's future depended so much upon relief from anxiety and strain. And she was not happy, far from it. "He is a strangely quiet and self-contained man, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent. 'And capable, I have been endlessly grateful to him for insisting that Mrs. Brant-Olwin's pearls must be put back at once in the hole in the cellar where West had had them, and that her detectives should be allowed to make the discovery. As it turned out, West's setting fire to his house before he made off was a most fortunate thing, for it disclosed the entrance to the cellar and brought Mrs. Brant-Olwin's detectives to the scene. Breck saved the day for us."

"And Marie," Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent said jealously.

"Yes, indeed—Miss Angouleme, too," Haslett agreed promptly. Her love for Marie was Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent's greatest joy, and Haslett grasped at the safe subject. "How is she?"

"Her shoulder is well again," she said more brightly.

Haslett rarely asked Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent an abrupt question, but it was a thing he had pondered. If Breck should marry Marie Angouleme and settle down happily with Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent at Kent house, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent's way would be smooth; she would have companionship and Breck would be an efficient manager of the estate. "Does she love Breck?" he asked.

Her face clouded. "I'm not certain. I know she never cared for that—for West. I've told her his history, as we regard it now, an experience that has made a noble man of Breck. But all she said was, 'It is a most sad history, madam—his face shows how he has suffered.' That was all. She is just the same devoted child to me, sweet, but so grave. She never speaks of Breck, and nothing would induce me to ask her a question or meddle—I've had one severe lesson in match making. She and Breck talk, at meals and so on, but it's plain that they avoid each other. I'd like to believe that she's happy—I know Breck is not—he's wretched, for, Haslett, I'm certain he loves a woman, but it's not my little Marie—it's Mrs. Brant-Olwin."

"Mrs. Brant-Olwin!" Haslett exclaimed.

"Yes. They are devoted to each other—he goes to see her every day. They've been devoted to each other ever since they met—at my dinner. What troubles Breck is that history of his he will have to tell her and he may lose her."

HASLETT had been surprisedly pondering. He said with decision: "She grew up in a rough country; his early history won't matter to her. If she loves him, she will marry him."

"Yes, like Bella. She threw everything to the winds and married Colfax. Willing to risk life with him in a Brooklyn flat—do her own work and all that! Bella! I must say the letter she pinned to my pillow before she eloped changed my opinion of Bella somewhat—she's a woman, after all. I suppose we're all alike, given the chance." She was thinking of Marie. She did not know, but she was certain her child loved Breck as dearly as she had loved Richard Dunbarton-Kent. Her heart ached over Marie.

"I think Bella and Colfax will come out all right," Haslett said hopefully. "I've thought so ever since I went to see them and took Bella your forgiveness and your offer to make them comfortable in Colfax Hall and give them an income provided Colfax made good. I told you how Bella broke down and Colfax vowed he would make good. Colfax is not a bad sort—what he needs is some one to keep him straight. He told me he'd loved Bella ever since she was a little girl and that he went to pieces because of a quarrel they had. Evidently she loved him throughout that wild career of his, for she has married him, finally. It shows that there is something fine in Bella. When I told them what Miss Angouleme had done for the family and of the wrong we'd done Breck, they were terribly upset. Colfax said, 'I told you, Bell! I knew she was a good, honest little thing. That child an adventuress! You write to her and beg her pardon.' Bella said she would—did she?"

"Yes, not a bad sort of letter, stiff but evidently ashamed of herself. I doubt if Marie and Bella will ever enjoy each other, but if Bella will make a man of Allen Colfax, it's all I'll ever ask of her."

"Well, on the whole, things have turned out better than I expected, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent."

"Yes," she agreed half heartedly. "I don't mean that I am ungrateful—I'd like to see Breck looking happier, and my little Marie. You had better stay to dinner, Haslett."

"Thank you—no. I must get back to town. And, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent, remember Marie Angouleme is really your daughter now; you have legally adopted her—you have that joy. She'll marry happily some day. And if Breck marries Mrs. Brant-Olwin, he will be near you—you won't be losing him."

THAT evening as usual they took their coffee in the library, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent, Marie, and Breck, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent seated in her huge chair, Marie in the corner of the divan, Breck backed against the mantel shelf.

Marie had set her cup down and was idly plaiting into little folds the red chiffon of her gown, a fold for each thought: only three months ago, she had seen, for the first time, Breck standing like that. Three months? A lifetime! He had grown thinner. He looked so wretched always, when he came back from visiting Mrs. Brant-Olwin. But tonight he looked better, as if he were excited. Evidently the bad days were over for him. Mrs. Brant-Olwin was a real woman—today he had told her and she had understood. They were happy. It was true one made or marred one's own life. Way down in her own heart, she had never really believed ill of him; she loved him. It was jealousy of Mrs. Smith—a creature who had never existed—that had led her to strange imaginings. Jealousy distorted everything, bred suspicion, destroyed faith. She had tried to atone by helping to clear his name, by serving his family, by driving West out in a way that had saved the family from exposure. But he had turned to another. It was a bitter punishment.

Marie's hands came together, gripping. Then she stiffened, for Breck was speaking. He had said abruptly: "I am going away, Aunt Bulah. Mrs. Brant-Olwin has an immense tract in Arizona. She wants me to make salable property of it, irrigate it, and divide it up into ranches. It's work I can do. I have been considering it for the last two weeks—today I decided. Mrs. Brant-Olwin says she will come to see you and explain."

There was perfect silence for a moment. In the days past, had West made such an announcement, Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent would have said: "And when are you and Mrs. Brant-Olwin to be married?"

But of Breck she asked no questions: there were few people whom Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent respected as profoundly as she did Breck, or of whom she stood in greater awe, or over whom her heart ached more. And there was her child to be considered—Marie first of all. Breck and Mrs. Brant-Olwin had decided wisely; Mrs. Brant-Olwin belonged in the west. They would go west and be married and live there; Breck would be happy. And, for her little Marie, it would be far better.

"It is for you to decide, Breck," she said in the affectionate way Marie knew so well. "I have hoped that you would stay at Kent house,"—there was a slight quiver in her voice—"find your happiness here and, in a way, take the place of my dear husband. I am not in the least afraid of your past—it's made the finer man of you. All that will ever worry me is that I misjudged you. But you know best in which direction your happiness lies. And, Breck, I have already made arrangements: I want you and Bella to live in comfort: there are two millions of your uncle's money that I have saved for you children. I have settled one million on Bella with a proviso, Colfax—the other million is yours, without any proviso. West doesn't exist."

Breck had flushed to crimson. He held out his hand to his aunt. "Thank you, Aunt Bulah. I—don't know how—to thank you enough. It's what you've said—not the money——" he said jerkily. "Mrs. Brant-Olwin has been—kind—too. I'll explain before I go away—I can't—now," and he turned on his heel and left the room.

Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent was looking at her child. The light fell full on Marie's face; she was looking at Breck through the window. There are times when misery invites sympathy; there are other times when sympathy would be an added hurt. Mrs. Dunbarton-Kent rose and left the room as noiselessly as possible.

Marie did not know how long she sat alone in the big room, but Gibbs knew. He inherit fortunes. We seek young men, buried as you have been.

"The utterly guileless."

The stranger urbanely ignored this sally. "You have between six and seven millions, in cash, bonds, securities, houses, apartments, hotels. You are part owner of a line of steamships that plow the seven seas. You own pulp mills. O, I know all about you. I could sit down and write your intimate history from the age of six until the present hour—a Boswell to your Johnson. As for that, so could any insurance agent, if he were seeking to get you on a policy. Simple business, when you're taken back of the scenes."

"Go on. What else do you know about me?"

The stranger settled himself more easily in the chair and extended his legs. "They used to call you Colly and whistle after you, as if you were a dog."

Bancroft stared into the fire.

"You never felt the desire for revenge for all the humiliations of your boyhood?"

Bancroft turned. "What good would it do? In their boots I might have done exactly as they did."

"You expect me to believe that the thought of reprisal never entered your heart?"

"O, I don't say that. Simply, I had no thought of torturing them. I did have dreams of going away and coming back some kind of a hero; some nonsense like that. Strike an enemy and you only inflame him; bring shame to his cheek, and you vanquish him."

"And now, if you wish, you can turn the whole village inside out."

"If I wish"—thoughtfully. "But go on, Boswell!"

"Nobody ever paid any attention to you—none of the villagers. The school children used to hoot at you and their elders to look upon you with tolerant contempt. But one day at school you turned suddenly and thrashed the biggest boy in the lot. After that they let you alone."

"You've got that right," replied Bancroft, his astonishment growing.

"YOU have had but three friends; your housekeeper, a middle aged spinster who plays the church organ, and the principal of the village academy. When you were a little boy you used to go out under the big elm in the front yard and read. "Morte d'Arthur"—at eight! Imagination, the touchstone of all true adventures. Such books, when most boys would be delving into Nick Carter!"

"I never had any money to buy books."

"Your father must have been a scholar, with such a library."

"I never saw him take down a book."

"What—such a library and not use it?"—with the air of one scandalized.

"I imagine the books were the result of some foreclosure. The books, the vases, the chairs in the dining room, were all acquired by foreclosures, probably. As you seem to know, he never gave me any money, never inquired about my comings and goings, never discussed his affairs in the city; but he never spoke roughly or laid a hand on me. Once a year—Christmas—he replenished my wardrobe, cheaply. What money I ever had I earned at odd jobs—Saturdays in the grocery and later as a farmhand on the nearby farms. I'm tough, physically"—recalling the ten thousand in the drawer.

The stranger did not reply: he was staring with puckered brows at that section of the bookshelves that flanked the fireplace.

Bancroft went on with his intimate history, never considering that for the first time in his life he was confiding his innermost secrets to a human being, an utter stranger besides. "I met some queer characters among the wandering farm hands; a broken down actor, a preacher with bad lungs, and a pugilist with one eye. Each gave me a little of what he had."

"So that you can act, preach, and fight, if need be!" The stranger laughed again.

Bancroft did not like the quality of this laughter. It eluded him. It seemed to come from behind a wall or from a deep cavern. What he found himself strangely wanting was the smile. There it lay, hidden tantalizingly in the corners of the man's lips. What would provoke it?

There was a diversion. The stranger rose abruptly and approached the book shelves. He took down a book and riffled the pages.

"Ha!—the essays of Montaigne; the Frenchman's Koran." He replaced the volume and selected another. "Tristram Shandy—guileless Uncle Toby and the Widow Wadman!" He wandered along the rows of books, quoting, commenting.

Bancroft's bewilderment continued to mount. He could not reconcile the man's scholarship with the absurd business he was apparently promoting, the sale of adventures. Pretense: for Bancroft could not get away from the notion that there was a riddle behind the absurdity.

PRESENTLY the stranger stopped and drew out another book. He balanced it on his hand, and looked away, seemingly drawn into some other time, some other world. The hawky outlines of the face softened visibly, perhaps under the mellowing influence of some tender recollection. He remained entranced for two or three minutes, until Bancroft stirred suggestively. The man turned and stared at his host, with just enough astonishment in his expression to convince Bancroft that he had, for the space, forgotten his surroundings and rather resented being returned to them abruptly.

"Ah! that's the marvel of books. I was miles away. And so you have swallowed all this stuff"—cynically. "How much have you digested?"

"More than you would expect."

"Yet I don't suppose you know what you've got here, aside from the fact that the library is distinguished for its taste. There are first editions for which collectors will pay large sums. That Horace is a true Elzevir. You read Latin?"

"Yes."

The stranger clapped his hands. "Victorian, eh? Well, well; young folks don't pay much attention to Latin these days. Horace has been relegated to the ash can. Ars Poetica—whoever hears of it these times? Chloe has become a flapper with hair wads on her ears and chewing gum in her cheek."

Bancroft laughed. But for all that he recognized that the stranger was bubbling with ironic humor, rather an unusual emotion to betray, when the air of a seller should be uctuous. Still, to talk to some one who would understand; to expose the acid bites of all these years; for once to throw reserve and wariness to the winds. Why not? It was patent that the man knew all there was to know about Collingswood Jeremiah Bancroft. To babble freely, then, since the stranger could not profit by the sidelights any more than he could by the main. To empty the bag and for once drain his soul of the accumulated bitterness.

"I have had plenty of leisure," he said. "There isn't much to do at night in this village. The movies are only Wednesdays and Saturdays; so there wasn't much else to do but read and study."

"And you never had any ambition to pack up and clear out, to see the world outside?"

"Often. But until recently I never had anything to pack up. A man does not go to New York with only ten dollars in his pocket, and I never had much more than that at one time."

"That doesn't sound adventurous in spirit. There are millionaires in New York today who arrived with no more than ten cents."

"Perhaps I had ideas. Perhaps I considered it best to wait until I had some mental armor with which to defend myself when the time came to strike out. But perhaps you're right. I'm a dreamer rather than a doer. These books! No matter what the poison was, here I found the antidote. But for these books I might have been the clod you evidently expected to see."

"Whereas I find a young man erudite far beyond Dr. Eliot's five foot shelf. Darwin, De Foe, Balzac; that is to say, the philosophy of the origin, the philosophy of adventure, the philosophy of sex. Alice in Wonderland, nudging Pantagruel! Twelve hundred books!"

"O, many of them have gone over my head. My noddle is young. Some of these classics are for maturer minds than mine," replied Bancroft candidly.

"Ah! What would leave a man of my age tranquil in spirit and flesh turns your brain into steam and your blood into froth."

"O, not quite so bad. Let us say, some troublesome human thoughts."

The stranger nodded. "You will be a remarkable young man. I rather expected it, from my information."

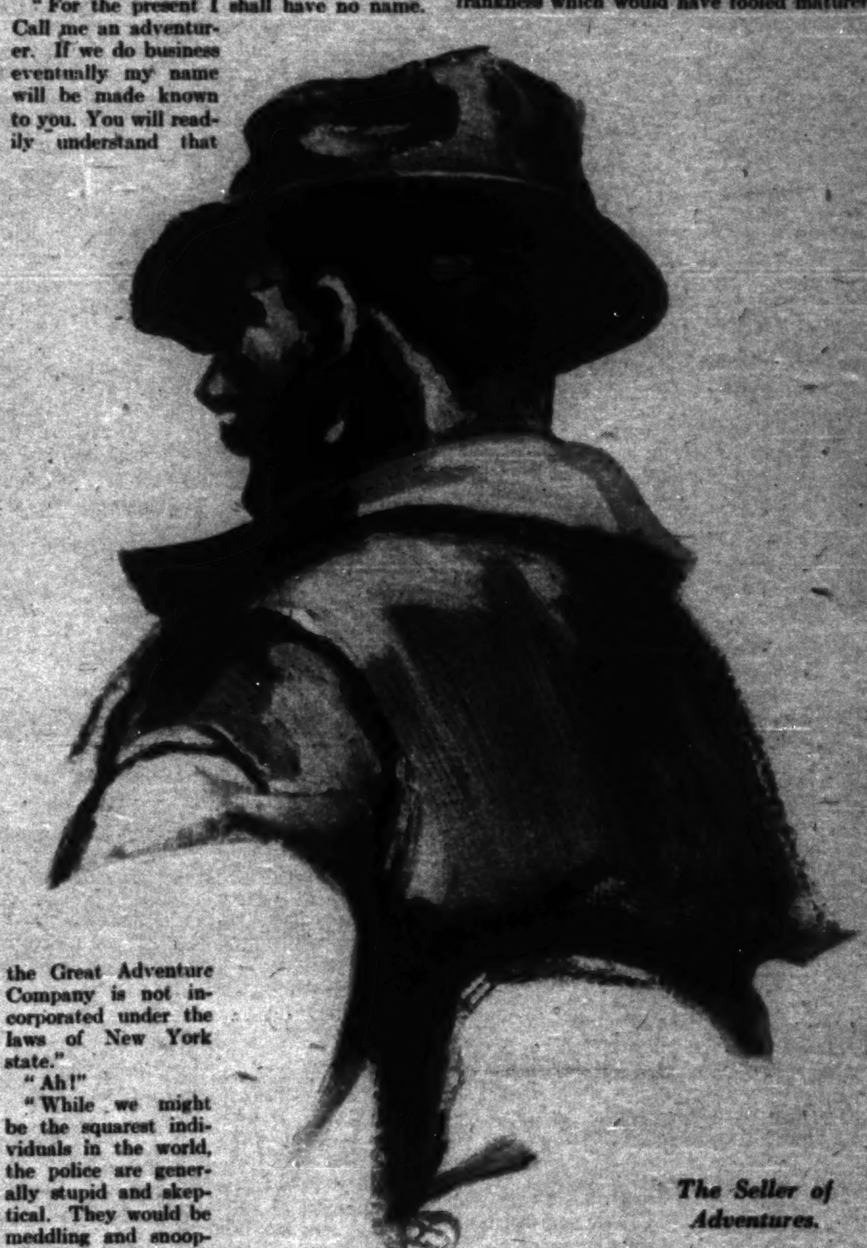
"And yet you approach me with the idea of selling me a plotted adventure? Come, now; decidedly you are after some of my money. That's evident. Come out into the open and tell me frankly what your game is."

THE stranger reached down for his portfolio, still damp with rain. He laid it upon his knees and opened it, Bancroft watching him curiously the while. Forthwith a document was produced, but the producer did not at once extend this for the young man's inspection. Instead he beat a light tattoo with it, reflectively, against the damp leather.

"For the present I shall have no name. Call me an adventurer. If we do business eventually my name will be made known to you. You will readily understand that the Great Adventure Company is not incorporated under the laws of New York state."

"Ah!"

"While we might be the squarest individuals in the world, the police are generally stupid and skeptical. They would be meddling and snooping. We never use the mails, but approach our prospects in person. Have I your word of honor not to repeat what I may tell you?"



The Seller of Adventures.

Bancroft thought this over carefully. There could be no ultimate harm in giving his word. Within a short time the man (and his absurd project) would vanish down the path up which he had come. But for the man's amazing intellectual side—and it was this rather than his business that held Bancroft's interest—the young man would have dismissed him curtly in the beginning. So he gave his word, out of careless curiosity to learn if there was a mentality which could defend logically so illogical a proposition as this Great Adventure company.

THERE came a flash of that mutiny of the mind when the thought refuses to concentrate upon the immediate problem, but flies elsewhere. Why had his father spent the best years of his life in this obscure village when he despised it? Why had he not sent his son to college when he had been provided with ample means to do so? And why should any man scare him to death when there would be no material profit in the deed?

He heard the adventurer's voice, but sensed nothing of what was said until—— "And that is why I use the word philanthropy. Your life has been particularly humdrum, and all the while you have dreamed and dreamed. You have in succession been Robinson Crusoe, Galahad, John Ridd, D'Artagnan, Marius; you have lived in rush thatched huts and palaces; you have loved Hannibal's sister, Agnes; Olympe de Cleves, Elaine, Cosette. It is, then, as a real benefactor that I come to you."

"At ten thousand a benefaction."

Again the merry mask dropped from the blue eyes, but the transition and return were so rapid that Bancroft missed the expression of malevolence.

The adventurer continued, adroitly defending his cause with a clarity and a frankness which would have fooled maturer minds than Bancroft's, who felt himself being hypnotized. For what was the man doing if not painting in glorious colors the dreams of boyhood? Feeling himself drawn, he sought to break the spell.

"What is your profit out of this ten thousand?" he interrupted.

"Generally our profits range between five and seven thousand. Of course, we have to lay out moneys for which we should not be able to account to you. That would be giving away our secret."

"Generally!" exploded Bancroft. "You mean to tell me that there exist fools who have signed your contracts?"

"I should not call them fools. I stand ready to acquaint you with several who have signed our contract, now at the end of their adventures, grateful indeed to have been hauled out of the humdrum and set upon the whirligig. Remember, part of the fun is the suspense, the wondering when it will begin and from what direction."

"Wasn't it Solomon who said there was nothing new under the sun? He was before your time."

"Everything is new under the sun; but if you and Solomon mean everything repeats

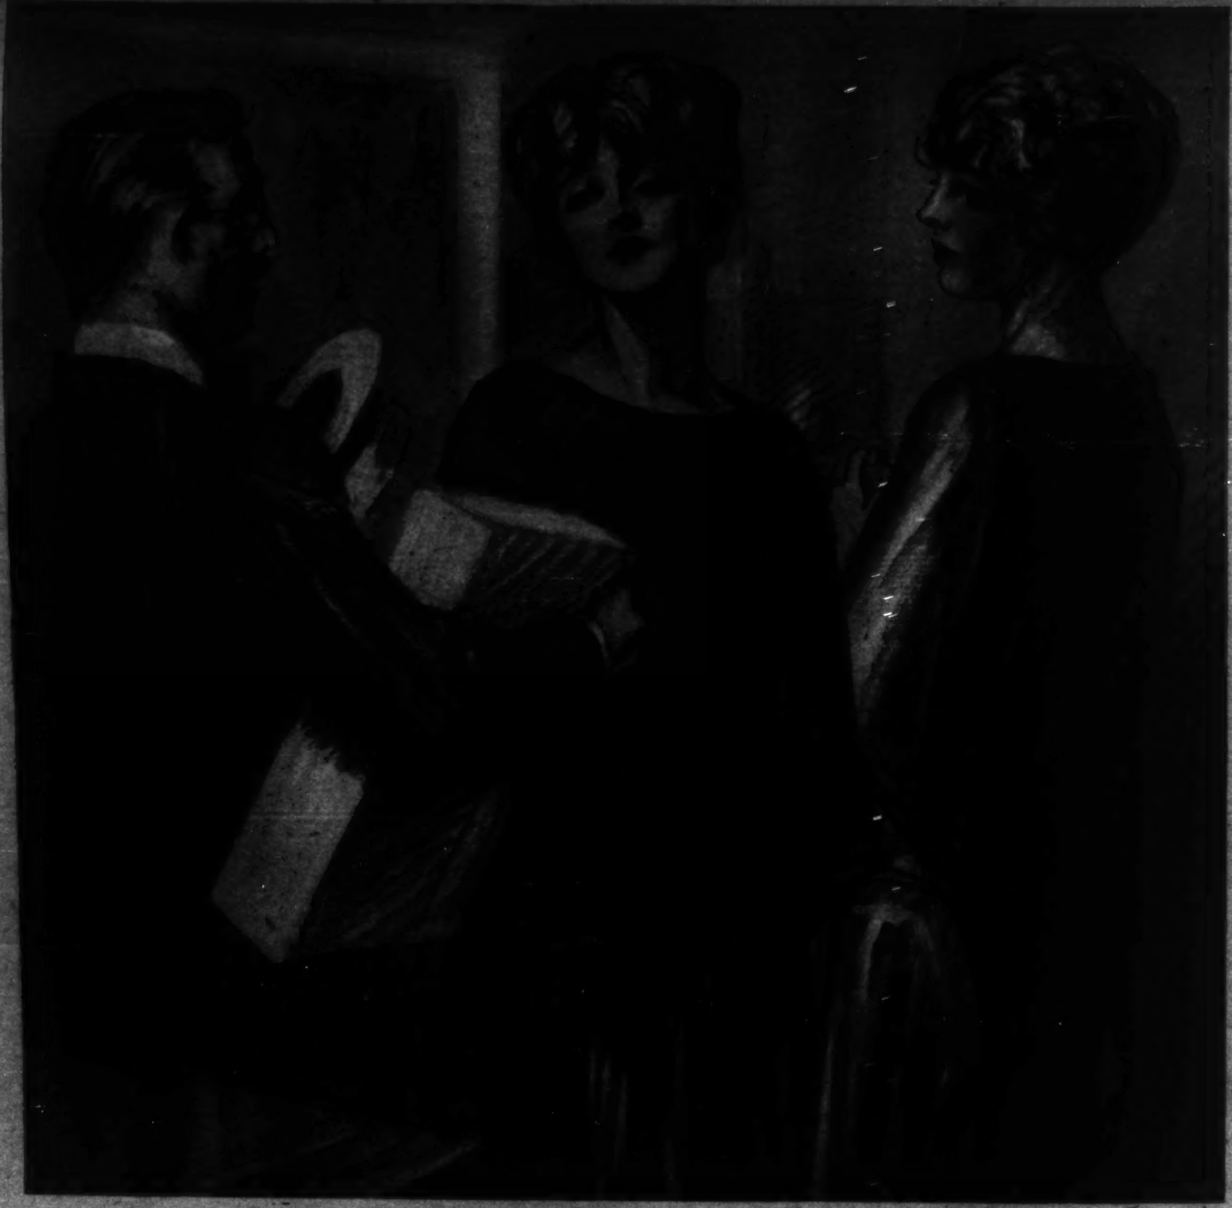
The country shopper shops in the city and frankly isn't a bit impressed—not one bit. "At home we never have crowds like these and the salesmen all know one by name. And we're just as up to date at home!"



What chance has a mere man—a susceptible one at that—against two awfully grand salesladies! Mr. Mossman has come all the way from the suburbs by way of the office to return the hairy tweed Mrs. Mossman bought last week. It scratched her and was awfully itchy on a muggy day. But the salesladies aren't going to be a bit impressed with Mr. Mossman's pathetic tale of woe.

RICH FINDS are being made by a scientific expedition sent by the Field Museum of Natural History to the Sand Creek district, a short distance northeast of Alberta, Canada. Soon after beginning work the members of the party found the shells of a giant turtle, a petrified tree of the sequoia type, similar to the giant trees of California, and portions of fossil dinosaurs. The picture shows two of the men digging out the fossilized bones of a giant reptile found in the side of a cliff. Dr. E. S. Riggs, associate curator of paleontology, is in charge of the party.

Our Escape from the Bolshevists

by Beulah Artsimovitch

Being the True Story of the Flight From Red Russia of a Russian Noble, His American Wife, and Their Daughter

SECOND INSTALLMENT.

Reunited.

WE reached home at last and fortunately found our apartment almost as we had left it. It had not been searched and our servant met us at the door. The dear faithful old woman had every night turned down the beds for us, and every morning put everything in order for the day. For two months after our return home she stayed with us, but we were not able to give her enough to eat. Her feet began to swell, and she would have died if she had remained in our service. So she was forced to take a place as children's nurse in the house of a rich bolshevik commissary who had more than enough to keep her alive.

The first night at home we were so happy—to be again in our nice comfortable beds after twenty restless nights on a straw pallet. We had been asleep only a few hours when the maid woke us up saying that eight soldiers were in the kitchen and wanted to search the apartment. Before I realized what she was saying they were already around my bed.

With them was our dear old porter. He was our best protector in those uncertain days. He was an old man who formerly brought the wood up to our apartment and had, during the bolshevik régime, everything to say in our house, as president of the pauper's committee. He took us under his protection.

Miriam jumped out of bed, slipped on her dressing gown, and stood near the soldiers. They commenced looking in the beds, cupboards, curtains, passing through all the rooms in the house, opening all the drawers, looking that night, so they said, for firearms. They were not a bad lot. They made the search quickly and politely. One of them remarked that he was dead tired; they had made so many searches that night. The one object that worried them the most was an apparatus for massage which they found in one of the drawers. It was worked with a handle, producing a buzzing noise. They wondered if they had not discovered a quick firing gun. And when Miriam showed them how it worked and said it was for massage, they exclaimed, "Who wants massage now?" and threw it back into the drawer.

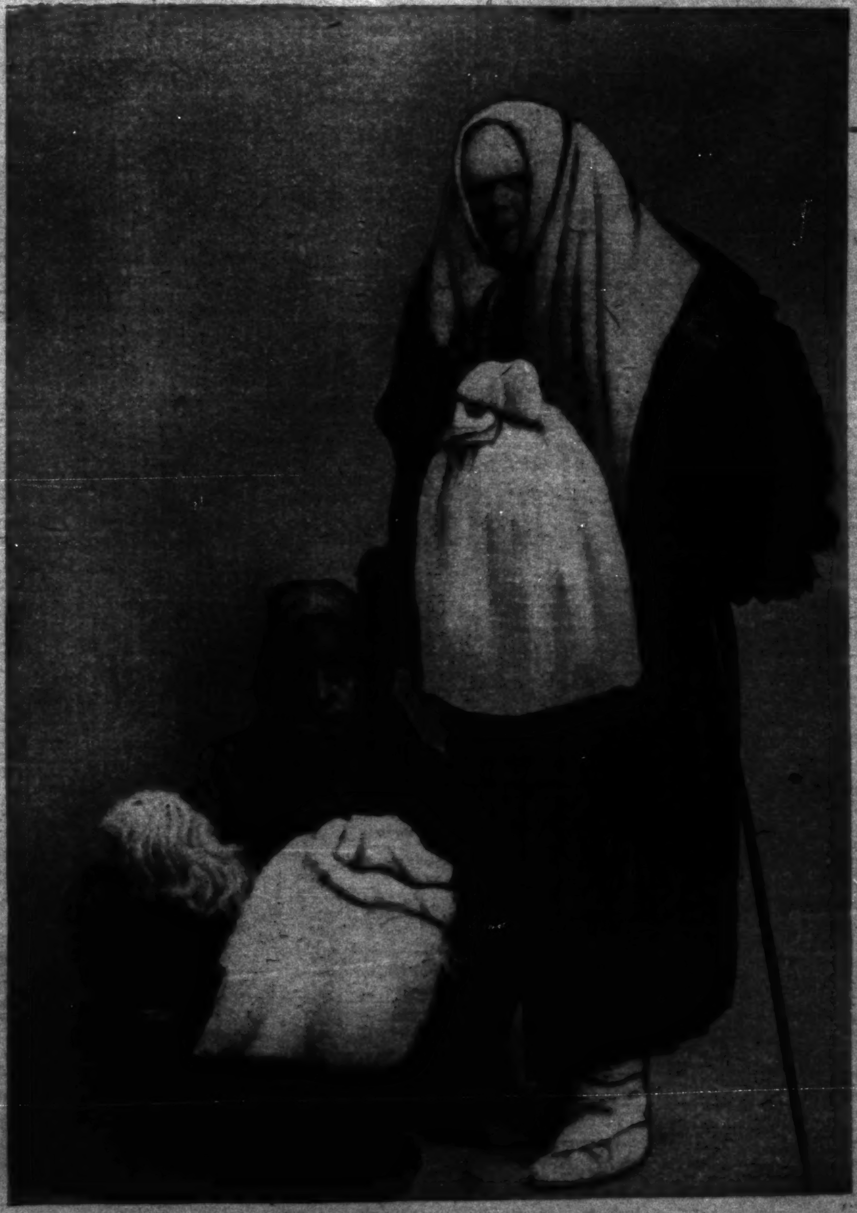
They left without making any trouble, but it was a frequent occurrence to be disturbed during the night by a band of soldiers searching for food, clothes, papers, firearms—any excuse for coming in and taking away what little one had left.

WE never went to bed without destroying letters or papers with any writing, especially English, hiding photographs, concealing our money by rolling it up in small rolls and putting them inside the curtain rods. We never dared to go to bed without taking all these precautions, for sometimes an insignificant paper, such as a private telephone list of names, was sufficient to make the searchers believe they had discovered proofs of a "White plot."

We lived in a state of continual fear. I never left the house without saying good-by to Miriam, never knowing if I should return. When we went to bed at night we thanked the good Lord for saving us during the day, and in the morning for having saved us during the night.

Days and weeks passed. My husband was still kept in Moscow in a prison camp. We corresponded through friends who made trips to Moscow and back quite regularly. I sent him money and clothes he needed and knew he was well. We were anxious to see him free and home again, as the "Whites," under Judenitch, seemed to be newly advancing in the direction of Petrograd, and there was danger that we should be separated from each other. We could hear occasionally the cannonading of the White army and expected them hourly, quite sure that they would come this time. All Russia would have gone over to them.

At this critical moment Miriam decided to go to Moscow to try to free her father. You can imagine how I felt, thinking that Moscow might at any moment be cut off and we should be separated, perhaps forever. All our friends in Petrograd told her she was deliberately signing her own death warrant.



Mme. Artsimovitch and her daughter Miriam disguised in the peasant garb in which they finally made their escape from red Russia.

It was most difficult to get permission to leave Petrograd, especially for Moscow. However, she managed to persuade the Bolshevik commissaires to give her a permission to go to Moscow, but not to return.

ARRIVING in Moscow, she first began by going directly to the most vicious and ferocious of the Bolsheviks, but with no success. She went from one office to another, fearing nothing and no one, every day getting the same answer, "He cannot be released." She continued her desperate efforts and finally decided to go and wait in the antechamber until she was allowed to speak with one of the women members of the central executive committee of soviet Russia.

At last Miriam gained admittance and asked Mme. ——— to obtain her father's release. "You know you can do it," she said to her. They conversed in English, Mme. ——— speaking English perfectly. Her answer was, "I will release your father by vouching for him if you can find a second communist to do the same."

Miriam quickly took advantage of the good disposition of her interlocutor, and said, "Surely I will find some one, but will you sign the paper immediately?"

Mme. ——— took it and wrote across the paper, saying as she did so, "Your father will be free." Miriam thanked her joyfully and then said: "You have set my father free, but I myself am a prisoner here in Moscow. I have no permission to return to Petrograd."

Madame rang the bell for her secretary and Miriam received then and there a permit to leave Moscow. With that paper she was able to get her ticket for Petrograd in half an hour; otherwise it takes several days of hard work.

SHE returned here and was soon able to get one more communist commissaire to vouch for her father. The precious document was sent to Moscow and we began to hope and expect hourly the release of my husband.

One week, two weeks, three weeks passed and he did not come. We were in despair.

Then Miriam, unbeknown to me, decided to call Mme. ——— on the telephone from Petrograd, a thing few persons would have thought of under the existing conditions, and fewer would have dared to do.

Mme. ——— was at the telephone. "Here is Mlle. Artsimovitch," Miriam said. "My father is not yet set free."

Madame answered, "No? No? There must be some mistake; he will be free tomorrow."

Miriam was addressing her in English, but Mme. ——— answered her always in Russian.

My husband was set free the next day. Free to leave the prison, but not to leave Moscow. And had he not escaped he certainly would in a short time have been rearrested, the fate of so many others, and eventually shot and laid forever to rest in an unknown grave.

AFTER my husband's return we tried to continue our life as best we could, but each day it became more and more difficult. It was a case of complete starvation. It was a struggle every day to even find a little gruel, potatoes, and wood.

As I said before, our one old servant who remained with us as long as she could had to leave us finally and after that it was my daughter who prepared what little food we had. There was little or no wood to be got; soon we had to destroy old boxes, cupboards, and doors, chopping them into small bits of firewood to be used in the little stove improvised out of a biscuit tin. We never had wood enough to light the kitchen range. The kitchen, the corridors, and most of the rooms were completely frozen. We could have skated in the corridors. While my daughter was feeding her small stove her foot would freeze to the floor, if any water happened to be upset and she stepped on it. We all of us ate and lived in one room

We put up hangings on the wall and several rugs on the floor to keep out the cold. The only happy moment of the day was when we were tucked up in bed with hot bottles. The temperature in our room was never over 5 degrees Reaumur. We wore fur coats in the house and shawls over our heads and high felt boots.

During the whole winter we only once had a bath, and this not at home, but in the house of our friend, a physician, who managed to get wood in payment from a patient, and we were officially invited to use his bathroom. Ours was frozen when the frost first began.

In November the water and the sewer pipes froze and burst; even the water for cooking had to be fetched in pails from a house in the neighborhood and carried up to the third story by my husband and Miriam. The house we lived in, like almost all the houses in Petrograd, was in an awful condition. No repairs were made and no chimneys swept. The inner court became a dumping ground for all the refuse of the entire house.

One of the handsome principal thoroughfares on which we lived looked like a village street, and so did all the streets and avenues in Petrograd. The pavements became dangerous for walking, as the snow and ice were never swept away. The snow and the ice from the roofs hung over them and now and then crashed down on the heads of unfortunate passers-by; so soon every one walked in the middle of the street, slipping and stumbling with loads on their backs.

WHAT a sight the long broad streets of Petrograd presented at that time. No horse carriages; seldom a motor, in a cloud of evil smelling smoke filled with armed savages. Slowly moving, rattling electric trams in the middle of the street crammed inside and hung outside with bunches of men and women fighting, pushing each other in their efforts to get in or at least to hang on. A procession of pedestrians in the strangest garb, moving in two opposite streams, some carrying sacks and bundles, some dragging a loaded hand sleigh; starved, exhausted men, women, and children.

Occasionally a man or woman was seen dragging a sleigh with a roughly made unpainted coffin on it, followed by a number of people; a funeral procession. None of the past gay life could be seen, no birds, seldom even a starved dog. In the evening the streets were dark as pitch, no lighted windows, no lanterns to guide the few courageous ones who ventured out on the dead, deserted thoroughfares. Only occasionally a brilliantly lighted house, where there was heavy clump of trees and shrubbery some distance away.

"There's a little open spot among those evergreens," Miss Greeley explained. "It is about the size of a small room, shaded on three sides, and in front there's a lovely view of the water. That's where Farrand sits most of the time. He has helped himself to the place and it has become an understood thing that others shall keep away. Sometimes we stretch out his chair and he lies there asleep for hours. Sometimes he sits up and looks out over the water. When we remember him we go and wheel him in. Once we forgot him till supper time. He's a queer sort. He wouldn't call out or make any sign if we left him there all night. There won't be an extra chair, so we will take this camp stool for you."

Florence picked up the stool, whose position proved that some American fighter had languidly kicked it over as he left it, and carried it to the clump of trees. On the edge of these the head nurse halted and peered between the low bending branches.

"He's there," she whispered, "and he is sitting up in his chair. Go in quietly so you won't startle him."

FLORENCE endeavored to go in quietly. Her foot broke a twig and the camp chair struck a branch and evoked a protesting hiss, but the silent figure in the wheel chair did not turn its head. Struck by a sudden suspicion, she passed the chair stealthily and then turned for a straight look at its occupant. It was as she had thought. Though the young man was sitting up he was sound asleep, his head relaxed against a cushion, one limp arm and hand hanging at his side, the other hand still clutching the end of a linen rug that had slipped from his knees.

Very quietly the visitor placed her stool several feet to the left and a little in front of the wheel chair. Then, sitting down, she deliberately studied the sleeping man. It was not quite fair to him, perhaps, but the impulse that prompted her was friendly, and already her interest in him was strong. Her first impression was that he was very tall, very pale and thin, yet good to look at. His hair was almost black. She remembered that. So were the long eyelashes that rested on his cheeks. She took in the general immaculateness of his appearance. He had the look of one freshly shaven, freshly tubbed, and freshly dressed. The sleeves and trousers of his uniform were neatly creased. The hospital shirt he wore, with its open, rolled back collar, was spotless. Aside from this and the soft slippers on his feet, he was ready for the critical inspection he was unconsciously undergoing. His hands were large, well shaped, colorless, and painfully thin, with admirably cared for nails.

She nodded slowly and with approval. She had befriended many boys whose ears and necks and finger nails had once made her shudder. She had long since passed that stage of amateurishness. A suffering soldier was a suffering soldier, however unlovely his appearance, his manners, or even his nature. But she was subconsciously glad to find that this boy of her childish dreams still lived up, so far as he could, to the traditions in which he had been born.

SHE wondered what color his eyes were, and even as she wondered they opened, at first drowsily, then widely as they suddenly turned and met hers. They were dark, she discovered—very dark, almost black. Indeed, they seemed quite black under stress of their owner's varied emotions as he stared at her.

"I hope I haven't startled you," she said gently. As he seemed unable to answer at once, she went on.

"I should not have come, of course. I know you don't want to meet strangers. But—I could not feel that we were strangers." He was making it hard for her, with his silence and his intent, almost resentful glance. "You see," she added with a smile, "we both come from Weyo, as I told you in my first note—and I remember you when you were a boy."

"You—you do?" he stammered. A change took place in his expression, a change which she could not analyze. Was it merely resigned acceptance? It looked like that.

"Of course you are Miss Belden," he ended, quietly.

She was encouraged. At least he was not asking her to go.

"Yes. Do you remember me at all?"

For the first time he smiled. It was an ironical smile, and his voice, when he spoke, matched it.

"Of course," he said again.

She went on, resolutely. "Your grandfather's garden was one of the fairy places of my imagination," she told him, "because none of us children was ever invited to enter it. I used to look at the high brick wall that shut us out, and imagine the garden peopled with all sorts of things—fairies and gnomes and trolls. And sometimes I was horribly sorry for you because you had to live there, and sometimes I envied you."

She stopped. For a full moment he did not speak, but stared out over the water, his expression changing again. She felt that he understood. So much had happened since those old days! At last he turned to her with the air of one who has made up his mind, who has actually squared his shoulders to meet the issue of the moment.

"You were a schoolgirl then," he said at last, in the casual conversational tone of a courteous but not especially interested host. "A little girl with golden hair that always seemed blowing in the mind."

"Yes, I was fourteen, and rather untidy about ribbons. Of course you can't really remember much about me," she plumbed hopefully.

"O, yes, I do." The words were reassuring, but his voice lacked warmth. "You and your father permeated Weyo like an atmosphere. When people there were not talking about your father's public gifts they were gossiping about your ponies and your birthday parties and that sort of thing. And I remember seeing you quite often riding or motoring, always with your hair blowing out like a golden mane."

SHE had not liked part of this speech, nor the manner in which it was delivered. But—after all—he was a sick soldier, and, in a way, an old friend. Also, having shut out all others, he had at least received her, and that was progress enough for one day. She would go away and think him over before venturing another interview. She rose.

"We have established a common interest," she declared lightly, "and now I am going. I promised Miss Greeley I wouldn't stay long. But—I'm coming again."

He made no effort to detain her, nor did he apologize, grimly or humorously or bitterly, as many of the poor boys did, for his inability to show her the courtesy of rising. He merely inclined his head.

"Good-by," he said. And as an obvious afterthought, "Thank you."

She hesitated. Then, "May I come again?" she asked, and wondered at herself. She had not intended to ask that question. He waited perceptibly before replying, and she felt the blood mount to her cheeks and was furious with herself and the phenomenon. Why did she mind a rebuff from this man when, after all, the whole episode was purely a part of the post-war work she had taken up? It was not personal. The phrase was reassuring and she repeated it—"not personal at all."

"Why—why, yes," she heard him say at last. Then, slowly, as if he had realised his ungraciousness, he smiled up at her.

"Please come again," he said.

It was her first glimpse of the enchanted prince. She laughed triumphantly.

"I didn't give you much chance to escape me," she handsomely admitted. "Will you tell me what was in that garden when I come again? I have always wanted so dreadfully to know."

"I will tell you," he said gravely. "It was really rather a jolly old place. The odd part of it is that when I was a kid I thought, too, that it was full of goblins. It had a lot of dark, mysterious spots. I used to slay goblins in those corners—lots of 'em! And"—he looked at her—"I used to rescue you from all sorts of perils. You, of course, were the obvious princess," he ended, more lightly. That, surely, was "personal" enough. To her amazement, it made her heart contract. In the next instant she understood. He was still the enchanted prince, and he had come to this—to suffering and poverty and neglect. For a speechless moment she stood looking down at him. Then she put her hand into his.

"We shall have wonderful things to talk about," was all she could say as she left him.

BUT when she made her second visit, three days later, it was not immediately of haunted gardens that she talked. Since their first meeting she had been thinking of Farrand to an amazing degree. Her thoughts were like birds which, after brief flights, returned to him as to their home. She told herself that this was because he was from Weyo—avoiding any analysis of why that simple fact had suddenly taken on a peculiar significance and importance. She must plan for him. She must make that home town take an interest in its distinguished son. She must find out why he was in such financial straits. She must enlist dad's aid. All this being so, of course, she must think of Farrand.

She ended by thinking of little else. He had a fashion of suddenly visualizing himself for her—of coming into her line of vision, exactly as she had seen him during her visit. Sometimes his dark face was hard and gloomy. Sometimes his boyish smile, with its unexpected sweetness, flashed out at her. He came when he chose—not when she was quietly alone and ready to receive him, but when she was entertaining at dinner, when she was at the theater, when she was chatting around some tea table, when she was listening to music—most of all, when she was listening to music. He came, and with him came the companion picture of the years—the young prince of the enchanted garden, a mysterious, boyish figure shrouded in shadow. His words, too, returned to her again and again. "You," he had said, "were the obvious princess." Yet she had been so young, had caught a distant glimpse of him so rarely. Where and when had he seen her?

It was of her plans that she talked when again she found him in his favorite haunt in the hospital grounds, and she was so absorbed in these, so sure of their appeal to him, now that an entente had been established, that at first she failed to perceive his lack of response. The ice had been broken. Surely she could plunge in.

"Two of the Weyo boys are at college here," she told Farrand, at the end of her almost uninterrupted monologue. "Of course, you remember them—Bob Gordon and Ted Fiske. They are coming to New York as soon as college closes. I want to bring them to see you. You won't mind their being younger than you, for Ted is the most amusing boy I know, and Bob sings like an angel. You will enjoy them immensely, and they will be so glad to come and so proud to know you."

She had said all she meant to say, but she would have gone on, feminine fashion, filling his silence with sound rather than lose the ground she felt that she had gained. Now, however, she was checked by the look in his eyes as he abruptly leaned toward her.

"Miss Belden," he said crisply, "will you do me a favor?"

"Of course, I will—any number of them." She was conscious that she had made some mistake. The voice in which he spoke had not been that in which one sues for favors. And her plans had been so well thought out! It had seemed so wise casually to give him his proper place among his old neighbors, to assume casually that he would accept it.

"Then I beg that you will say nothing about me to our Weyo friends, or to your father, or, in fact, to any one. I am glad to know you——"

"I didn't give you much choice about that," she interjected, nervously.

He went on as if she had not spoken.

"But to meet a lot of well meaning people just now, wherever they come from or whoever they are, would do me more harm than good. I know this. I made it plain to the doctors and to Miss Greeley. And I shall be much obliged if you do not even mention my name to the friends you have spoken of. Is that understood?"

She felt like a schoolgirl severely disciplined by a master. The flag of her pride went down before the new experience.

"Why, of course," she stammered. "That is, I won't speak to any one I haven't already mentioned you to. I talked to dad about you the day I was here——"

"To what others did you speak? To those boys?" He fairly fired the question at her.

"No, but only because I haven't seen them," she honestly admitted. "And I wrote to Helen Moore, who lived in Weyo when we did. She is married now and her home is in Philadelphia, but I knew she would be interested. However," she added in a different tone, her poise suddenly restored by the realization of how friendly had been her intentions in all this meddling, "you may be sure that neither Helen nor dad will trouble you. And I realize now that the way I myself leaped over your barriers was—was unpardonable. I must apologize for that."

SHE was sick at heart. What a blundering idiot she had been to treat this man as she had treated the others—as if he were like the others. She had forced herself upon him, she had patronized him, and she was just enough to admit that she deserved exactly what she had got for doing it.

"Please don't apologize." His voice had changed. From the first she had observed what an agreeable and well bred speaking voice it was. Now it held an unsuspected quality of beauty and charm. "You are the exception," he went on. "There's always an exception, you know, to the strictest rules. I shall be frightfully cut up if you drop me."

"Really?" She was incredulous, but anxious to be convinced. She looked at him with eyes whose clear brown depths showed conflicting doubt and hope.

"On my honor."

He was smiling at her, not sentimentally, but with frank good humor—his most charming, boyish smile. It illumined the situation like a sun breaking through clouds. She drew a breath of relief.

"Then we're going to be friends?" she asked, and again she wondered at herself. What inner force was driving her on, making her actually humble to this man? She told herself that it was pity—of course it was pity!

"Indeed, we are," he assured her. "But we're going to be mighty exclusive. We're going to meet in the old garden that interested you so much and depend on its high walls to keep out everybody else. Shall you mind that—for a little while? And is it a bargain?"

He was still smiling, but his eyes were serious again. She answered under the urge of that new, driving inner force.

"Of course, it's a bargain, if you wish it so. What right have I to drag others into your life? I suppose we often forget that, in our association with convalescent soldiers," she added, with an almost fierce effort to pull herself together and change the nature of their talk. "We must often bore the poor fellows to death by bringing in people they don't know or don't care to know."

He followed her lead.

"It all depends, with most of the fellows, on whether those who come to see them are really interested in them. The men can always tell. And—well—they don't like to be patronized or made the objects of some butterfly's three day charity impulse."

DESPITE herself, she again swung the conversation back to him. There was something she had to know.

"In your case," she said, slowly, "I can understand. You have always shut everybody out—you and your grandfather. You must have been horribly lonely—but you seemed to prefer it, even when you were a boy. And evidently you have kept up your barriers all your life." Her voice stopped there, but he caught the unasked question, "Have you?"

"I was lonely, all right." He made the admission, then abruptly shied away from further revelations. The little girl with the blowing hair was knocking too urgently on the door of the past.

"What part of our garden will you play in?" he asked.

"O, are you going to give me some of it?" She had herself in hand now. This pity for him that made her heart swell and her throat ache should and would be diverted into practical channels.

"Of course. And I think the part you would like best is the sunken garden. That's off in the southwest corner, and you get into it by going down a little flight of red brick steps. When you are there you seem quite away from all the rest of the world.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Fashion, like Mary, has a little lamb, and although its fleece is not so invariable as was that of the famous retainer, its attentions to its mistress are quite as unwavering. Fashion's little lamb is lace, and every place that Fashion goes that pet is sure to be.

The fact of it is that the methods of introducing lace to our gowns, wraps, and millinery are infinite, and I am merely suggesting the adaptability of this trimming in the page of costumes given above.

At the left is an afternoon wrap of violet satin, the yoke of which is formed of heavy silk-and-wool lace of the same shade. Incidentally, these deep yoke effects have been very popular all summer, and often the yoke provides an avenue for brilliant contrast of fabric and color.

Smart resort folks are cocoaing at tea time more madly than ever. It would seem, indeed, as if this light brown tint, which has inflamed the imagination of the Parisienne for some months past has finally subdued our own fashionables. Here, second from the left, we present this light brown in an unusual model combined with lace of the same tint. The sleeves of this frock and the draped skirt with its side sections introducing a godet fullness are both features which are bound to focus the attention.

Speaking of this shade, to which we are becoming addicted, it is quite obvious that we have to carry on a brown relief. Without some contrast, in fact, we sink into the landscape like a tree frog. So those of us who are wise combine this tone with some brilliant tint. Now the brilliant tints especially recommended for this chore are the yellow, the brick red, and the tans found in that favorite plumage of Paris, the Indian coq feathers.

We find the combination of brown and yellow stressed in the center of the page in a beautifully graceful model sent me by a friend who visited the Ascot. The dress of yellow chiffon, with its lovely sleeve draperies, is here allied with lace of the same tint, and the only contrast is afforded by a girdle of velvet ribbons affixed with lace flowers. The hat incorporates two tones of brown chiffon.

Lace capes of all sorts and descriptions have formed a chapter of summer dressing, and you may select yours modified with other materials, such as metallic tissue, satin, chiffon, brocade, or you may be permitted the uncompromising transparency of the lace itself. Here we show a black Chantilly model with a deep yoke of black taffeta ruchings, from which hangs long black silk fringe. As a completing touch, the taf-

The combination of white chiffon or crepe with black lace has a certain weight in a season when there have been so many types of this kind. Here we are showing it in an especially graceful model, where the black Chantilly is draped, scarfwise, about the shoulders so as to finish the short sleeves of the white crepe Marocain frock. The draped and beltless line, together with the ornament of coral on the shoulders—these indicate two of the most persistent items of the present day afternoon frock.

For the afternoon affair the flapper is always urged toward a little frock of batiste or organdy with the fine handwork so much prized by the present designer of summery things. Fine tucks, hemstitching, eyelet, and other kinds of embroidery, appliques of the material in either self or contrasting tint, bands of metallic ribbon sewed on with a fairylike tracing of beads—these and other resources of trimming permit endless variation in the "simple" frock. The waist line of such frocks is often placed at the normal position and the long skirt is usually full. Of course, the slim silhouette is represented here in long waisted models with slender skirts, but the bouffante mode is undoubtedly more becoming to slim, youthful figures. This bouffante skirt is frequently developed nowadays in tier effect, and it is this idea which is represented in the exquisite model of mauve batiste shown second from the right. Eyelet embroidery is the medium of trimming expression, and the sash is of black satin ribbon. Black is sounded again in the jet beads which center each of the Valenciennes flowers on the horsehair hat.

The last of the models is a lace frock in the Lanvin green now practiced so assiduously both here and abroad. This green is on the sage variety, and it is very stunning on just the right type of woman. However, the talented wearers of Lanvin green are few and far between. It is certainly a fatal experiment for those of us who have the slightest inclination to sallowness. Indeed, the one ideal type for the wearin' of this particular green is the woman with creamy white skin and dark hair.

Laying aside all comments, however, Lanvin green is exceedingly smart, and the model of lace shown here commands attention, not only because it is developed in this color, but because of the effective combination of two types of drapery. That curved piece which is developed into the straight side panels is especially interesting, and indicates a trend toward an upward lift of the waist line in the center front. The girdle of gold braid fastens with two ornaments of carved gold, from which hang smaller ornaments of the same metallic origin.

Fashions Beauty Contests

THE POTTERS

Illustrations by J. H. Striebel.

by J. P. McEvoy

The Potters have taken Grandma—or Grandma has taken the Potters—they are not quite sure which it is—to the Whileaway Gardens, where Grandma will get her first taste of city life . . . Grandma has heard about this wild night life for years now . . . little does she dream that the only ones who lead a night life in this free country (you're free to do anything that isn't against the law) are the night watchmen . . . even the trips from the hip to the lip are fewer in number . . . perhaps the difficulty of always obtaining a pair of glass eyes with each pint may account for it . . . the modern ceremonial consists of a friend raising his glass and saying here's looking at you, after which he takes a drink and can't see you . . . mythology will have to be revised soon to include not only a blind Cupid but a blind Bacchus . . . maybe, who knows, wood alcohol has had something to do with making blind pigs that way.

Scene I.—Solving the Menu.

Grandma is surprised by the sudden weakness which comes over Pa and Red and Bill at the door of the garden . . . up to this point they have been able to stagger along under the weight of their hats, but here their strength fails and they can carry their burdens no farther . . . yet a comparatively frail girl takes up the burden with apparent ease . . . she will continue to appear frail, too, until they try to get these same hats away again without paying a tip.

HEAD WAITER (appraising the Potters with an unctuous eye and deciding they don't look like spenders):

Right this way, please, right this way.

(Conducts them to cozy table behind huge pillar, from which only a Houdini could see the stage.)

There (with a gracious wave of his hand) there, how's that?

BILL (brashly):

Rotten.

PA (timidly):

Thass all right, I guess. It's a little far away, don't you think?

HEAD WAITER (looking over Pa's head to approaching group):

'Right this way, please. (Starts down aisle.)

GRANDMA (to departing head waiter with a voice that has often carried across the "south forty"):

Come back here, Mister.

HEAD WAITER (returning, a bit perturbed):

Yes, madam. What is it?

GRANDMA (decidedly):

Look here, young man. Do you think for a minute I came here to sit behind a post all night? I want that empty table over there in front of the watchamaycallit.

HEAD WAITER (suavely).

That's reserved, madam.

(A bit of choice fiction—one of the six best sellers—that always deludes the smart city fellers like the Potters, but it doesn't feaze Grandma.)

GRANDMA (energetically):

All right, then, we'll take it.

(Gathers up her wraps and shoos the Potters over to table . . . plants herself in chair and eyes head waiter with amused defiance, as much as to say: Here I am; put me out if you can. Head waiter makes the best of it, shrugs his shoulders, and walks away.)

MA (astonished):

Why, mother! What will he think?

BILL (hugely delighted):

Thatta boy, Grandma. Give it to 'em.

(Walter appears magically and begins brushing imaginary crumbs off table . . . hovers, storklike, first on one foot and then the other.)

GRANDMA (loud enough to be heard):

What's he hanging around for? Trying to hear what we're saying? I hate a sneak.

MA (fearfully):

Shh, shhh. He wants to take our order.

PA (with expansive hospitality):

Yes, wattle we have for dinner, everybody?

GRANDMA (peering intently at items on bill of fare . . . evidently the manager was in the A. E. F. and heard about French).

Rossole Polonaise
Fresh poussin en cocotte au beurre
Bamboche of sole, Macedoine
Biscuit glace, pralinee
Potatoes au gratin

It doesn't make sense to me. What's it all about?

PA (bravely):

Let me see, now. Au gratin, that means with cheese or somep'n.

MAMIE (chirping in):

And au beurre means with butter.

GRANDMA (practically):

Why don't they say so? Don't they know how to spell butter?

(Looking down right hand side of bill, fascinated by the prices.)

Look at this, THREE DOLLARS, royal squab with something.

MAMIE (looking for it):

O, yes, here it is. Royal squab saute with cepes Provencale. Whew; sounds swell!

GRANDMA (witheringly):

Three dollars for a squab, when I've sold many a Dominecker rooster that high for six bits. What's getting into people, anyway?

(Well, that's what we'd like to know, too . . . however, the Potters finally get the dinner ordered, and then, as the music has begun to wheeze and snort—called music by request—Mamie begins to show signs of life similar to Longfellow's celebrated ship—she starts, she moves, she seems to feel the thrill of life along her keel.)

Scene II.—On with the Dance.

Grandma notices with keen eyes that modern dancing seems to consist mostly of walking . . . she has done plenty of it in her day, and over plowed ground, too, so this should be easy for her . . . besides, the rhythmic beat of the drums and adenoidal moans of the saxophone are beginning to agitate her . . . it's been a long time since she felt like this.

GRANDMA (to Pa, who is drumming on the table with his fingers and swaying his shoulders roguishly):

I can dance as good as that. Do they call that dancing?

PA (soothingly):

Why, Grandma, you can't dance that way. You're too old.

GRANDMA (with fire in her eyes):

Too old? Me? Peter E. Potter, I'm a long ways from dead yet, and don't you forget it. Just for that I'm going to dance this dance, and you're going to dance it with me.

(Pa protests, but Grandma is obdurate . . . drags Pa out on the floor and starts walking him around the edges of the dance floor, taking long steps like the others . . . soon gets into the swing of it and enjoys herself hugely . . . Pa, who walked up to the fifth floor once and talked about it for weeks, is soon winded, but Grandma keeps right on going . . . this is immense . . . could keep it up all night . . . applauds loudly when music stops . . . finally drags Pa back to table a total wreck.)

MA (to Grandma):

Why, mother! I'm surprised at you. I think this modern dancing is disgraceful!

GRANDMA (with a happy glow):

Disgraceful? Fiddlesticks! It's great. I wish I'd known about this sooner.

MA (horrified):

Mother! How you talk! And here I've been trying to tell Mamie what to do and what not to do.

GRANDMA (gaily, with a kindly smile at Mamie):

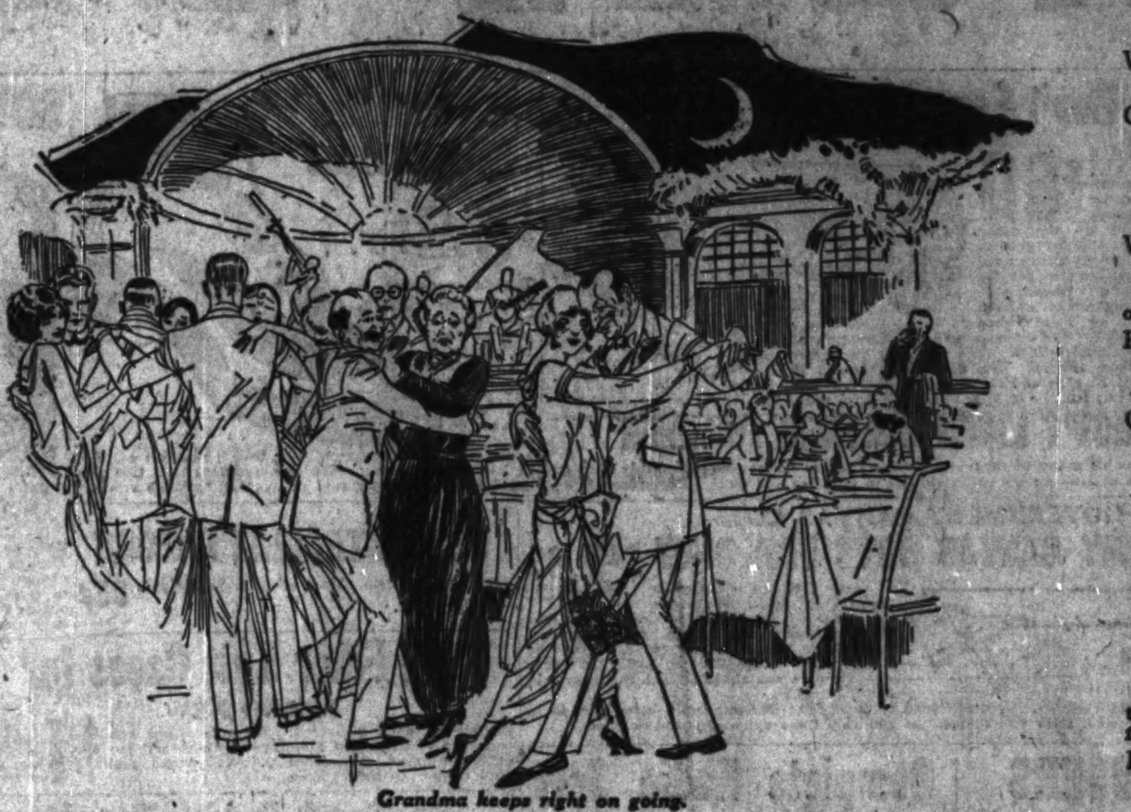
Don't worry so much about Mamie. She can take care of herself. I used to worry about you, but I got over it. Mothers fret about daughters because they want them to grow up to do the things they always wanted to do but never did, and then after they get to be grandmas they see things from farther off, so to speak, and what looked so important then doesn't bulk up so large any more. Besides, all the things you did as a girl are in your mind when you worry about Mamie, but when you get as old as I am you'll have forgotten a lot of them, because they don't count much anyway. They'll always be a young generation, don't forget it, and they'll always act young, thank God, and don't forget that, either. Boys'll be boys and girls'll be girls, and I wouldn't have 'em otherwise.



Grandma keeps right on going.

MA (reproachfully):

How you talk! You didn't used to talk like that.

GRANDMA (gaily):

No, I'm learning every day. As old Tom Riley Buckner used to say, the older I grow the more I find by goodness gracious out.

(Waiter sneaks up furtively and lays check on table face down, as if ashamed of the amount . . . he should be . . . Pa picks it up, turns it over gingerly, and winces as he reads the evil tidings.)

GRANDMA (interested):

How much do they charge for meals here?

(Cranes neck around and reads staggering amount)

What's cover charge mean? . . . and what's this chicken giblets, one dollar and seventy-five cents . . . (to waiter) Here, Mister, come here.

MA (scenting trouble):

Now, mother, that's all right.

GRANDMA (to waiter):

Is that right, chicken giblets, one dollar and seventy-five cents?

WAITER (loftily):

Yes, madam.

GRANDMA (sarcastically):

Young man, listen to me. You never saw the day, nor your father before you, when you could even lift one dollar and seventy-five cents' worth of chicken giblets. You're a highwayman, that's what you are!

WAITER (dutifully):

Yes, madam.

(Chorus of girls scantily dressed as pirates do piratical dance in middle of floor, waving flashing cutlasses.)

RED (to Grandma):

Lookit the pirates they've got there. They ought to have the manager and the waiters in it.

GRANDMA (talking aloud to herself):

One dollar and seventy-five cents for chicken giblets . . . why, I remember the time when I'd bring a whole market basket full of eggs down to the chicken house and they'd give me five cents a dozen for them. (Jazz orchestra tears into "Stumbling" . . . Grandma begins to beat time on the tablecloth . . . her attention wanders) . . . One seventy-five . . . one seventy-five . . . one seventy-five . . . what's the name of that piece, anyway? . . . c'mon, Pa, let's have another dance . . . one seventy-five . . . c'mon, Pa . . .

(Rises and drags Pa away from restful chair and starts loping around the edges of the dance floor with him again in that long canter, developed from walking over the fields through long years.)

BILL (chuckling in great glee):

Thattaboy, Grandma. (to Ma) C'mon, Ma, I'll take you around the floor. Don't let Grandma show you up. C'mon, be a sport.

MA (to herself):

Of all things! And at her age, too!

(It was long after midnight when Grandma finally allowed the weary Potters to take her home . . . poor Pa, how his feet ached, and he had to be down at the office early . . . as for Ma, she could hardly stay awake . . . even Mamie and Red and Bill were ready to call it a day . . . but Grandma was as fresh as a daisy . . . in fact, she wanted to know the very last thing where they were going to take her tomorrow night . . . well, they didn't know, but they're going to show her a good time while she's in the city even if it kills them . . . it begins to look now as though it might . . . who would ever have thought it of Grandma, and—as Ma would say—at her age, too? . . . well, well, tomorrow afternoon Red is going to take her over to the beach where he is a Life-Saver . . . what she'll see there ought to hold her a while . . . maybe . . . anyway, we'll see.

(And that's that—until next Sunday.)

GOV'T NEW KHAKI BREECHES

Almost every trouser manufacturer in the country is making khaki breeches, but none of them can make breeches of the same quality or as sturdy as those made for our Government. Why, breeches such as these are only sold by the highest type of sporting goods houses and sold at a price probably two and three times as high as we are asking for them. They could hardly afford to sell them for less and make their legitimate profit. Sizes to fit little and big men and women, as well as younger people. $2.45

New Full Sized Rolled Edge Mattress

We doubt if a new Mattress big enough for a double bed was or could be sold for under $10.00, especially a mattress of this sort. Weight about 45 pounds; rolled edge; fancy ticking; an all around honestly made mattress. $4.95

Government Durham Duplex Razors

New, with three blades. Quite a quantity at this price, 29c

U. S. GOVERNMENT

SUMMER DRAWERS FOR MEN

We bought somewhere around 250,000 of these garments. Balbriggan and ribbed styles. Sizes to fit most any man. They're presumed to be reclaimed garments, but in such a large lot you're bound to find the garments you want. These are exceptional bargains 9c

AUSTRALIAN JAM

2-LB. CAN

There is no Jam ever manufactured that's any better—couldn't really be, as it's nothing more than sugar and fruit without any adulterants. It's a full TWO-POUND CAN, and we're under the impression that this can of jam cost our government about 75c to $1. Can... 12c

ARMY TARPAULINS

When we first advertised these tarpaulins we had on hand and had bought from the United States Government 900,000 yards of this duck, we thought at the time that we'd probably have enough tarpaulins to last us for years, but evidently our price was so low that the business simply swamped us and today we're selling the last lot of these paulins—all the 900,000 yards from which these paulins were made is sold—so we advise you, if you need any paulins in the near future, and you feel our price is right, to place your order now. Of 30 oz. Government waterproof duck—khaki color—brand new:

Size 8x10, price, each	$5.60	Size 12x15, price, each	[illegible]
Size 10x12, price, each	8.40	Size 14x15, price, each	14.70

		Size 20x20, price, each	[illegible]

U. S. Gov't Escort Wagons

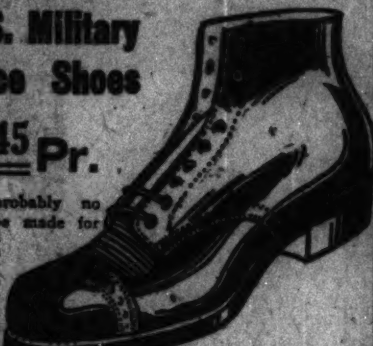
Brand new; a really wonderful wagon for coal, ice or general hauling. $60 They do not make wagons like this for general use—the Government used extra precautions to get the sturdiest, best wagon procurable, regardless of the cost. Two or Four Horse drawn vehicle. We've been told the Government cost was around $400.00. This wagon is for either Two or Four Horses. The body is hardwood, 10 ft. long, 3½ ft. wide and 21½ in. high. Rear wheels are 4 ft. 7 in.; front, 3 ft. 9 in. Tires are 3 in. wide.

GOV'T LINEN COLLARS FOR MEN

There are so many of them we haven't tried to count them—probably a million or so—and we guess they're in all sizes and clean. Dozen for 12¢

U. S. Military Police Shoes

$5.45 Pr.



There's probably no better shoe made for real, hard service. Its especially adaptable for our city police and men who are on their feet a great deal. Calf uppers. Big, broad, roomy toe. Heel of leather and rubber. We feel confident that this shoe could hardly be duplicated under $8.00 to $10.00 a pair.

GOVERNMENT LIBERTY STEEL COTS NEW, $1.95

Gray or Black—Here's one of those rare cases where, as the sale goes on the price rises. They're getting scarcer and scarcer with the Government and as time goes on we'll charge you more for them. Recently we sold them as low as $1.50, but it's our plan to raise the price to $2.45 some day this week. And they're easily worth that, as they couldn't be produced, we believe, under about $7.00. They're collapsible, tubular and have the best woven wire springs. Size 2 feet 6 inches by 6 feet 4 inches.

U. S. GOVERNMENT

Carts or Trailers

Strongest ingenuity could produce. Every conceivable reinforcement. The box is 6 ft. long, 4 ft. wide, 21 in. deep, about 1¼ in. thick. Wheels iron covered and about 3 in. thick. 60-in. diam. with 16 massive, solid spokes. 3 staves for canvas cover. Shafts, chain tugs, seat, footboard, back chain and poles, etc. Best trailer money can buy. Cost to the Government, we understand, was a trifle under $300.00. Deliveries will be made from Gov't warehouse at Hawthorne. $25

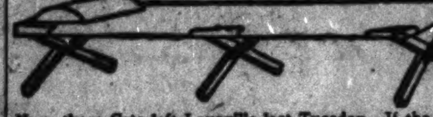
TOOL BOXES

Size 12 in. x 12 in. x 10 in., with hasp, hinges, etc. Looks to us like real value for the money. Each, 25c

U. S. GOVERNMENT CANVAS COTS

35,000 NEW ARMY CANVAS COTS FOR ONLY $2.85



And these cots are made of 30 oz. waterproof duck. We doubt if any other cot made for the Government was made of heavier than 16 oz. non-waterproof duck—and we feel sure this cot could not be sold anywhere under $7.00 to $8.00. In other words—we give you about $7.00 to $8.00 worth of pleasure for $2.85.

Now, these Cots left Louisville last Tuesday. If the railroad strike doesn't interfere, we'll have them in in plenty of time—if they're not in, we'll show you the sample and ship them out a day or two later.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

DRESSING FOR THE MOMENT.

By Mary Brush Williams.

[Chicago Tribune Foreign News Service.]

PARIS—[Special correspondence.]—I have already told you the story of how the artist and I once jumped into a smart motor at Deauville and asked the chauffeur to take us to the polo match. He drove us for hours in the opposite direction from everything smart, and made a final stop on the outskirts of a scrubby golf course.

When we looked a little startled, he realized his mistake, and said, "O, but I have confused the polo with the golf."

This letter is to report an advance over that degree of illumination of a year ago. Sports, as we have noted, are gradually dawning for the Frenchman, and he now has a definite impression of the game of polo—and this is represented in the pictures above.

We think of blue skies and a meadow stretching far beyond the grand stand and wiry ponies scrambled into a mess with much the same general outlines as a football scrimmage. We have it in the back of our minds a little fearfully that somebody is going to get hurt, or a horse is going to break a leg, or one of those dangerous looking polo sticks is going to knock the wrong thing, and we feel a great deal of concern for the wife of the chief player, who sits not far from us. This last is about as near as we get to any reaction toward the grandstand.

But to the Frenchman the grandstand's the thing, and the green meadow with its dare devil activity a mere excuse for the grandstand to blaze gloriously. There was a game at Bagatelle, and for smartness I doubt if any other grandstand ever put up an appearance to touch it. Styles of the present foreshadowed the styles to come. Of course, the whole interest of the moment is to pick the winners in style.

What will last over into autumn? The flashy mannikins and demi-mondaines appear representing the rich and reckless present, flaunting their disregard of any future, even a brilliant one. "The moment" is their motto, and they live up to it. And all the time the conservative ones along the side lines are saying, "There, regard that! It will live over into autumn. I'm going to have her make me one long and full and paneled."

The next day (this being a Sunday) the speaker repairs to the Galeries Lafayette and buys up a job lot of material, which gets constructed into a costume so nearly like the one flaunted by the grande mannikin of the smartest of houses, and it makes said house writhe and mumble, because it represents a total cost of some $15. And Americans are going out of the parlors of the grande maison because they will not pay the $250 that the original model costs.

One of the styles which came up without much advance press work being done on it is represented in the first coat. The first time I ever saw it was in a little fur shop—an exceedingly little fur shop, indeed—on the Marché St. Honoré—where I was having a Hudson Bay coat made over, which was bought some time in the early days of my history. I was telling the Frenchman all about how to do it. Of course, after the manner of his race, he paid not the slightest attention, so it turned out to be quite smart indeed, and is exacly on these lines—as are about one million, five hundred thousand other fur coats throughout Paris. I think it will be a knockout for fall.

This one, in soft ermine, was lovely over the blue printed crêpe georgette dress which it sheltered. A variation which this offers over the earlier models is the huge collar and deep cuffs. For a time coat collars, and especially those on furs were not so large, but I believe Paris is adopting the slogan of "the bigger the collar the smaller the coat."

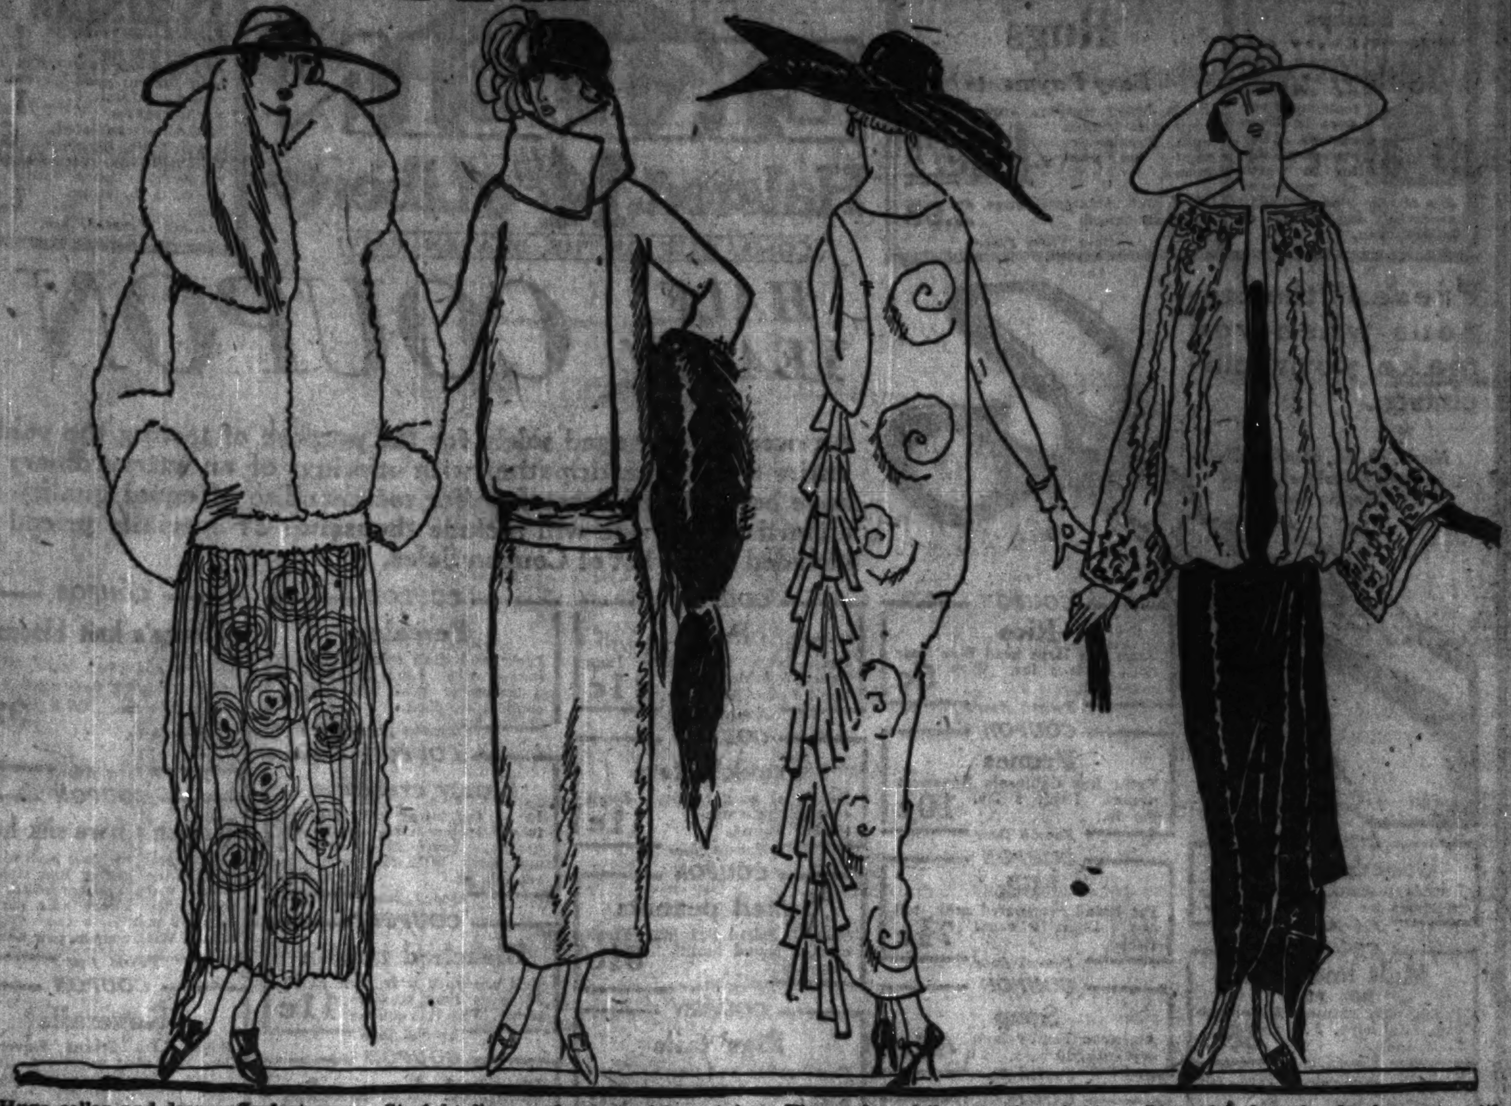
There was a movement for a time to make hat trimmings point upward, but the Parisian woman likes to point them down. They may be made such a factor in softening the features if something graciously flattening nestles against the throat. This hat is of white felt with an uncurled ostrich feather in blue and silver pointing down the white collar. A fold of green crêpe runs round the crown.

The following tailleur makes one of the smartest of Parisian silhouettes. This line was seen in varying degrees of slenderness at the polo match. Needless to remark, the slenderer the better. The costume shown is of ochre casha, with a squarish cut collar, and one of the low belts fitting tight. The great point at the present moment is, while respecting the blouse which is the fashion of the moment, not to let the effect get the better of you and go too far. Only a slight blouse is in much better taste than one spreading wide. It ought to fall heavily. The suit is absolutely ungarnished and simple; the French have come to that. Time was when you could scarce tell a tailleur of theirs from a dressy afternoon costume, so much garnished it was. This lady carried her silver fox fur and wore a Reboux hat of black suede, tufted on the side with white clipped feathers.

Wasn't I saying some time ago something about fire cracker trimmings? Poiret makes them in the original colors. But always in France the line is the thing, and as the idea has developed, firecrackers have been made in all sorts of varying colors and materials. To wit, in the third costume, a string of them follows the long line of the silhouette in the material, which is blue printed crêpe de chine. As the artist says, the dress shows further "an amusing use of the modern design of printed crêpe de chine." Effects that used to be obtained with embroidery are now stamped into the material, with some of the leading designers in the world of art making the patterns.

This one is in pale gray blue, with a black design lightly printed on it. There are no sleeves. The dress is draped so that it shows the figure plainly when one walks, and it is cut up one side. The hat is of black satin with a huge bow of ribbon across the back.

The last dress shows the use of Rodier material. A red, hand loomed, embroidered crêpe with a yellow design in it is draped into a short jacket with kimono sleeves, and the jacket is bloused, bowing thus far to the fashion of the day. The underdress is of black satin tightly draped up one side, and crossed as one would cross a coat. The hat is typical of the present summer with its scarlet and oranpe feathers crushed against the crown.



Huge collar and deep cuffs feature an ermine coat.

Straight lines and no garnishment is the tailleur edict.

Firecrackers follow the line of this draped silhouette.

Bloused jacket of red crêpe worn with black satin underdress.

"IT is not all romance one collects on a vacation," writes a girl. "What doth it profit a romantically inclined young person with the moonlight nights and a ukulele equipped canoe and a person with a lovely tenor if one's face looks like the setting sun, her hair is brittled from its too powerful sunbath, and freckles, freckles everywhere. I am a sad sight and my heart is where the freckles are, a distressed and worried one it is."

My mail indicates a whole world of such distressed and worrieds. Naturally enough, however, when one considers that the skin is treated like a hot house plant the rest of the year and then suddenly exposed to the destructive rays of old Sol for hours and hours at a time.

Be a Sun Dodger.

Freckles, even the large ones, never strike me as being such a great calamity as the loss of hair or twenty pounds extra. A woman I know whose hair is prematurely gray says not only a person who has not gray hair can be philosophic about it. So it seems with the freckles. Freckles are due to irregular distribution of the pigment forming cells in the skin and their appearance is caused or exaggerated by exposure to sunlight. Tan, too, is a similar manifestation of stimulation of pigment formation by light. The only difference is that persons who tan have an even distribution of the pigment forming cells in the skin, while in those who freckle the distribution is uneven.

Therefore, the prevention of tanning and freckles consists in avoiding sunlight. If you find them really a grief then prevention is your safest and surest relief from worry. Freckles are difficult to get rid of. The remedies in general use are not magic in effect, and frequently quite unsatisfactory. Frequent rubbing of the pigment spots with lemon juice is an old and familiar measure and just about as good for the light summer freckles as any I know of, but it has to be carried out two or three times daily [illegible] to make improvement in a short time. Sponging with a peroxide solution after the face is washed causes some bleaching. Strong solutions of corrosive sublimate are sometimes embodied in freckle remedies, but as this is one of the most dangerous poisons, only under a physician's direction should it ever be used. If there is any skin abrasion it might cause disfiguration.

Try This for Freckles.

This paste I have found perhaps the most satisfactory of any in treating the stubborn freckles: Oxychloride of bismuth, one dram; calomel, one-sixth grain; peroxide of hydrogen, one dram; lanolin and vaseline, four ounces each. Apply it at night after washing the face and allow to remain on the skin.

In addition to the ordinary precautions that are part of dress, a wide brimmed hat, a parasol, a thick coating of a heavy cosmetic powder affords some protection. Over a base of cold cream lightly applied, it has additional advantages.

One woman I know who used to suffer horribly from sunburn found relief and prevention in a zinc ointment, with which she rubbed her face and arms before going out on the golf course.

But for sunburn you will find nothing better than equal parts of linseed oil and limewater. It takes the sting out of the burn almost immediately and is most healing. I recommend it as a preventive as well. Grease the neck and arms and face with it lightly and then dab powder on top of that, and I doubt if the sun will leave any of its favorite coloring upon you at all.

To Bleach Sunburn.

The lemon juice and the peroxide solution are recommended for bleaching out the tan. The following preparation has no harmful ingredients as a bleach and it does effective work:

Zinc oxide, 2 drachms; boric acid, 1 drachm; oil of sweet almonds, ½ fluid ounce; anhydrous lanolin, 1⅓ ounces avoirdupois; glycerin, 2 fluid drachms; rose water, ½ fluid ounce. Mix the lanolin and almond oil in a warm mortar. Add the zinc oxide and boric acid, rubbing together until quite smooth; then incorporate the glycerin and rose water.

An occasional sun bath is advisable for the hair. After shampooing it, drying it in the sun is most wholesome and healthful. But it is most inadvisable to sit under the full noonday blasts with the head unprotected for an hour or more. I have seen hair given this treatment resulting in a total loss of sheen and lustre, and taking months of brushing with oil applications to get it back to its former glory. In one case the color actually was bleached out. If you happen to be among this class of sufferers you are recommended to add to the hair brush a light application of olive oil, sweet almond oil or liquid vaseline and then brush vigorously. The oil of the hair which the sun's rays have extracted has to be supplanted this way. If the hair has ever been dyed prevention is absolutely necessary.

Needs Dress Form.

"Has some one a dress form, size 44, she no longer needs? I have three small children to care for and, as my husband has been ill, I can't spare the money for this article. MRS. J. S."

He'd Like a Bicycle.

"I am writing to you hoping that one of your readers will give a bicycle to an 11 year old boy whose father has been confined to bed for three years and cannot afford to buy him one. The boy is not strong, and you may readily see what good a bicycle would do for him. We would be glad to call anywhere in the city should one be offered. "MRS. G. B. S."

If your storeroom harbors a bicycle your boy has outgrown may not this boy have it?

Working Way Through School.

"Has any one some clothes for two boys who are working their way through boarding school? Their mother is dead and their father is away working to support two younger ones. They wear size 16 and 18 and shoes size 9½. MRS. W. B. B."

This request will send some good reader rummaging through her clothes closet, I know.

Toys for Small Boys.

"I wonder if any one has some toys for little boys? I have three sons—the oldest 5—and I can't afford to buy them any playthings and, as I do all my own work and take care of my baby, I haven't much time to amuse them. R. W. G."

If there are toys stored away in the attic, won't you take them from that dusty retreat and give them to these children?

How to Make Peach Jelly

Peach Jam, Too—It's Delicious

By Ann Proctor

Hitherto peach jelly has been almost unknown; even experienced jelly makers said it couldn't be made. Peach jam, too, was very difficult to make. Now, however, by the new Certo Process, so highly endorsed by government experts and cooking authorities, anyone, even a child, can make both of these delicious preserves at home in a few minutes and be successful every time. This is the way to make

Peach Jelly

Do not peel but pit about 2½ qts., or 3½ lbs. ripe peaches. Crush them thoroughly, and add ½ cup water. Stir until boiling, cover pan and simmer five minutes. Place fruit in jelly bag and squeeze out juice. Measure 6½ leveled cups (2¾ lbs.) sugar and 3 cups (1½ lbs.) juice into large saucepan, stir and bring to boil. At once add 1 bottle (scant cup) Certo, stirring constantly. Continue to stir and bring again to hard boil over the hottest fire for one-half minute, stirring continually. Take from fire, let stand one minute, skim and pour quickly into sterilized glasses.

Peach Jam

Use fully ripened fruit for finest flavor; peel, remove pits and thoroughly crush about 2¼ qts. or 3 lbs. Measure 4 level cups (2 lbs.) crushed fruit into large kettle. Add 8 leveled cups (3½ lbs.) sugar and mix well. Stir hard and constantly and bring to a vigorous boil over the hottest fire. Boil hard for one minute with constant stirring. Then take from fire, add 1 bottle (scant cup) Certo and stir it in well. Skim and pour quickly. This makes 11 half-pound glasses of jam.

By the above method, as practically no boiling is required, all the flavor and color are saved and two-thirds more jam or jelly is made from the same amount of fruit. The Certo Book of Recipes tells how to make nearly 100 kinds of jam, jelly and marmalade. Get a copy of the book and a bottle of Certo from your nearest grocer or druggist and begin to make all your jams and jellies by the easy, certain and economical Certo Process. Extra copies of Recipe Book will be sent if you write Pectin Sales Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Important—Certo is "mother nature's jell maker"—the pure, concentrated, jelly making principle of fruit—contains no gelatine or preservative; and because of the fact that it saves time, money, color and flavor and never fails, has revolutionised the art of jam and jelly making. Every housewife should use it. Certo-made jams and jellies keep perfectly.

If your grocer or druggist does not have Certo, please telephone Leeds Brokerage Co., Dearborn 3346, to learn where to obtain it.

New Way to Curl Hair Fine for Outdoor Girl

The silmerine method of curling the hair is the proper thing [for either bobbed or long hair] before going motoring, boating or golfing, or indulging in any outdoor sport or exercise. This will not only give the hair the most beautiful wavy and curly appearance imaginable, but wind or heat will not take the curl out. The curliness is quickly acquired and lasts much longer than where waving tongs are used. Besides, the hair will be bright and lustrous, instead of dull and dead looking. When combed out it will be as nice and fluffy as if it had just been shampooed.

Just get a bottle of liquid silmerine at any drug or department store, follow the accompanying directions, and you will be simply delighted with the result. This product is of course perfectly harmless and there is nothing sticky, greasy or unpleasant about it.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

THE BEET.

"HOW always sweet and refreshing is the beet!" said the eater of some buttered beets which had been perfectly cooked, going on to praise them so highly as to place them above all other vegetables. It can hardly be granted that they are that, but this eater abhorred beets in vinegar, and had just begun to learn how much this vegetable can be exalted by delicate handling.

Boiled Beets.

It is customary to boil beets too long. That strongly colored water has also a strong flavor from long cooking. It may also have some flavor from dirt. It is not easy to wash the root part clean, and the part of the top we leave on the beet is likely to have collected a good deal of dirt between its closely growing stems; therefore prepare as follows:

Wash beets as clean as you can after cutting off stems about an inch from the crown of the beet, and drop vegetables into boiling water on the stove for five minutes, or a little more, should the beets have a canal of small roots at one side. Drain off hot water and rinse thoroughly in cold water, and note how clean the skin looks. At any rate, it should look much brighter and clearer than before. Put to cook in boiling water to cover well, or to barely cover, in a closely covered kettle. These beets will cook tender in about two-thirds the time, or even in half the time, that those dropped directly into nonboiling water will.

Buttered Beets.

When boiled beets are tender, drain off water, cover with cold water, and rub off skins. Chip them so that the pieces will be much finer than when sliced, butter, add salt if necessary and a grind or two of white pepper. Serve in a brown pottery marmite for a peasant or porch meal, and you will declare that hardly any vegetable is sweeter or more palatable. After the beets have been scalded so as to be thoroughly cleaned they will steam done in about the same time they will cook in water, and in this case they possess all their health coins. Of course, beets have sugar and they have bulk. These two ingredients make them fine laxatives. They also contain predigested mineral matter. That is what plants do for us—predigest the minerals of the soil.

Molded Beets.

Boiled beets, chopped rather fine and buttered, may be molded in almost any desirable small shape, and will keep it with no other binding save the butter, so that they may be served hot as a fine garnish, or left in the molds to cool and then eaten cold without any addition, or some French dressing may be used.

Cutting a Beet for Salad.

A large beet may be sliced down from crown to tap end one way, and then held firm and sliced at right angles to the first cuts, so that it will fall apart like a great blossom. Some of the blossoms may be deep red and others pink. For making the latter, cut off the root end before cooking it, so that the beet will bleed.

Quickest Cooked Beets.

The fashion of peeling and cutting beets fine before they are cooked is Russian and Jewish. New beets will cook in ten or fifteen minutes if they have been quickly grown, but the more fibrous sorts require about twenty-five minutes. Cut up fine, just cover with water in a closely covered small kettle, in which there is no waste space. Finish with butter and other seasonings. A slightly thickened meat sauce of good quality may be used instead. Beets so cooked and finished with butter seldom have the magenta shade that boiled beets have, but have the red of currants.

Beet Steaks.

The following way of cooking beets quickly, and in camp fashion, worked out two or three months back, interested enough people when printed in a "daily" to be repeated here: Peel and slice beets. Melt some butter in a frying pan—the amount depends on quantity of beets to cook, but two tablespoons will be enough for a pan full—put in beets and cover the pan closely. Cook over a fire which will not burn the butter and so the beets, and after ten or fifteen minutes cook on the other side until the slices are tender, salting lightly. Not one drop of color comes out of the beets and so none of their virtue is lost. The butter if carefully cooked is not injured for digestive purposes. Mostly when fats are split by heat do they become unwholesome eating.

English Beet Jam.

The English use all sorts of vegetable fillers to extend fruits in making jams, and the following well tested out (some years back) proved to have a fruit taste with no flavor of carrot, but such a jam is best used for immediate consumption. Take equal weights of carrot and beet root, wash and boil separately until tender. Prepare beets by scalding five minutes first, and carrots may be cooked ten minutes in boiling water when the skins may be rubbed off, to save scraping. Pass both through a coarse sieve and measure the puree. To each pint allow one half pound of sugar and the juice of two lemons. Boil gently for thirty minutes, and put up like any other jam.

Canning Beets.

Beets of a uniform small size may be put up in the most satisfactory way by the one-period cold pack method, which should be followed most exactly. See farmers' bulletin 839 or any of the others which give the cold pack system in all its details. They are best and least expensive about the last of August.

Beet in Hashes.

In the "calico hash" made of the boiled dinner remnants and far preferable to and more palatable than the dinner, and in the minces used for stuffing cabbabes and to use, when cooked, as a border, the beet is a great addition. It gives character both in appearance and in flavor. For a mince which may be used as a border, or to stuff eggplant or cabbage, etc., prepare the frying pan by cooking in it two slices of bacon cut fine. Cook with this the following vegetables put through a food chopper: one medium sized onion, one stalk of celery, one-half a green pepper and enough carrot to make one-half cup. Use these proportions, multiplying whole quantity to suit. Cook these gently in the bacon fat for one-half hour with the pan covered, then add to them one chopped cooked beet.

Beet Salads.

Of beet salads there are no end. When hardy greens are used slices of boiled beets are almost universally used in the Parisian dressed salad. Slices of small beets on the leaves of the center of a head of leaf lettuce with French dressing over all may make a most enticing salad. The old-fashioned chef used beets cut in little diamonds or lozenges or in roses or what not to garnish his Russian salad. That mixture was covered with a heavy mayonnaise and the pieces of beet—sometimes with other garnishes and often alone—were stuck on with as much care as truffle bits are used to ornament sauces, jellies, etc.

Embarrassing Moments

Where It Wasn't Due.

My most embarrassing moment happened to me on the day I was celebrating my twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. My family and friends had all been most kind in remembering me.

As I returned from an errand my neighbor came out and handed me a beautiful plant, making some remark appropriate to the day. I thanked her enthusiastically for the gift.

She interrupted me as soon as she could, politely saying, "Oh, the plant isn't from me. A florist delivered it to your house, but as he could not get in I offered to take it until you returned."

There Was No Charge.

It is an established custom in our village to give garden parties for church and charitable organizations.

I saw my neighbor stringing lanterns from the trees and placing tables on the lawn for an evening party. Later in the evening when the lights were gayly swinging I invited a friend to go over to the fete next door.

We seated ourselves at one of the tables, and as my neighbor approached I asked her what kind of ice cream they were serving. There was no choice so I ordered two servings of vanilla and as the delicious white cake was passed I expressed a desire for chocolate.

We were nicely served and I was enjoying the party till I inquired of my neighbor what I owed her and she replied, "O, we were just having a little party in honor of my mother's birthday."

Bobby will celebrate his birthday the latter part of this month. He was asked last evening what he would like, and after much debating he decided on a boat and a cab. After some further discussion as to when the toys could be purchased he said, "But if you bought them now I could be playing with them until my birthday."

Francis cut his finger so badly that the doctor had to take several stitches in it.

Later, when some one asked sister right soon."

Doris was present while her mother and a caller were discussing the recent marriage of a young couple of their acquaintance. In the course of the discussion it was said that both had repeatedly asserted, "Only single blessedness for me." And now they had surprised their friends by getting married.

At last Doris spoke up: "I know, mama. They started out to be good friends and changed their minds."

The school teacher of the first grade was instructing her pupils in the art of spelling.

"What is this word, Lewis?" she asked, writing street car on the blackboard.

Lewis looked puzzled.

"Well, how does your daddy go to his office when he's in a hurry?" she asked.

"He runs," was the prompt reply.

To the mystic life-long tie woven at the altar by book and oath, this ARBUTUS BLOSSOM WREATH WEDDING RING adds the strengthening link of flower language. Five tender words translate its meaning: "Thee Only Do I Love." It was the wedding flower of the Puritans.

Ask to see this delicate design at your local jewelry store. Be sure this stamp W — an emblem of good faith since Pharaoh's time — is inside your ring. A wedding ring so stamped, plain or carved, is your guarantee of superiority in quality, workmanship and style.

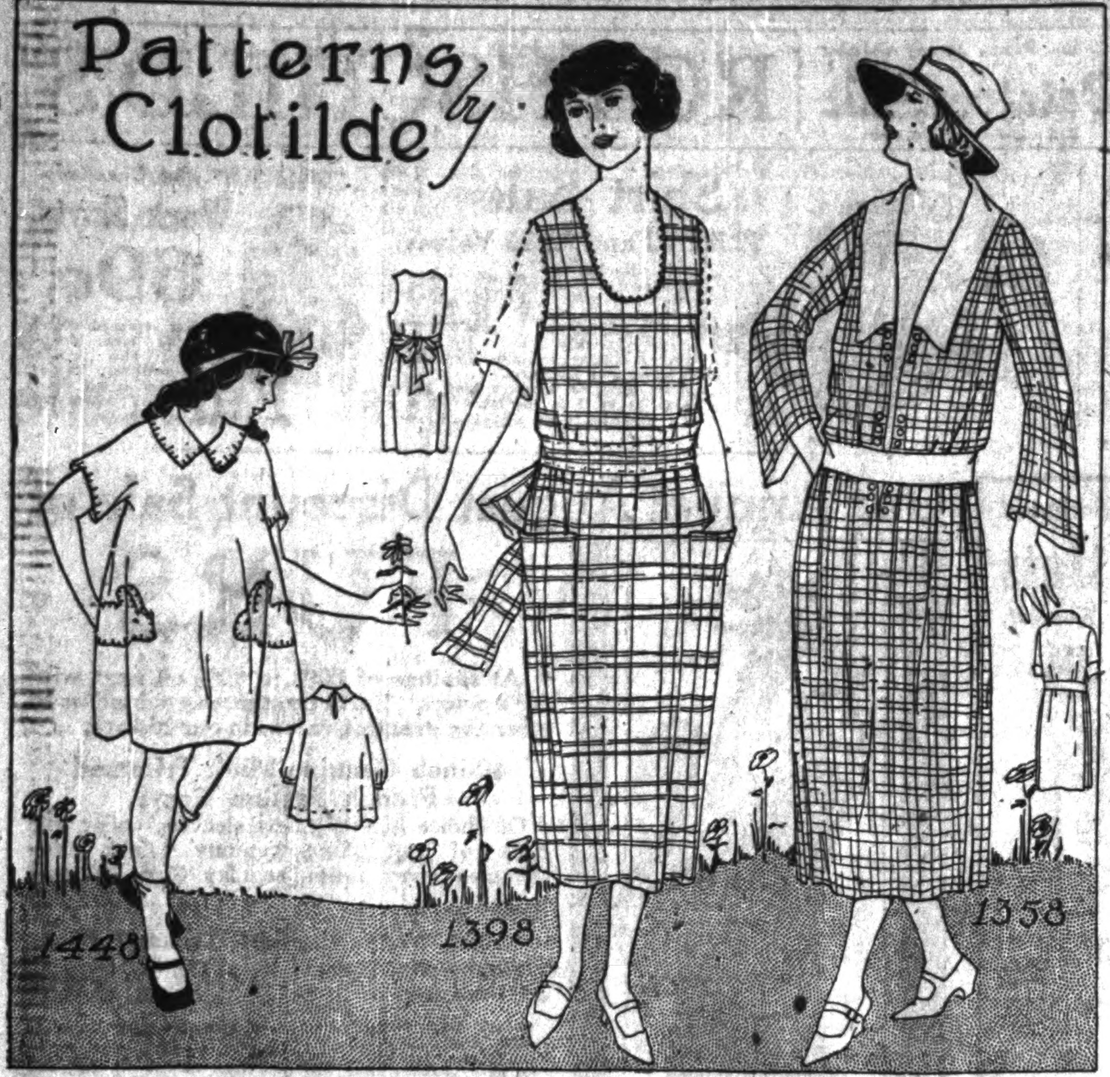
Patterns by Clotilde



1448—Child's dress. Sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 4 requires 1½ yards of 36-inch material.

1358—Woman's and misses' dress. Sizes 16 years and 36 to 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅜ yards of 36-inch material with ⅞ yard of 36-inch contrasting.

1398—Woman's apron. Sizes 16 years and 36 to 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅜ yards of 32 or 36-inch material.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

This department appears every day in The Daily Tribune.

THE plaits at each side of the back and front of pattern No. 1358 make it quite different from the usual style of one piece dresses. The pattern is in two pieces—front and back—the skirt extending straight out from the waist line to give the necessary material to lay the plaits. These are laid and brought back into position so that the underarm seam, from armhole to hem of skirt, makes one unbroken line.

Lay the plaits before joining the seams, by placing the pieces, one at a time, on a large table, so they will be quite flat. It is, of course, necessary to have all perforations clearly marked, either with French chalk or basting thread, and then fold a plait in position, pinning it at intervals. Turn the cloth to the wrong side, and see if the underside of the fold is perfectly smooth. If not, release whatever pins may be necessary to have a smooth fold from top to bottom, on both upper and under sides.

Baste each plait in position from the top to the bottom, and leave these bastings in until the skirt is finished. They will have to be ripped part way at the bottom when the hem is laid, but after the hem is finished baste each plait in position again down to the bottom of the skirt.

Embroidery could be used with good effect on this dress, choosing a design that could be worked on the collar at each end, on the upper sides of the cuffs, and just across the belt in the middle of the front. Russian ideas in clothes are so popular just now that no mistake would be made if a cross stitch design be chosen, working it in several gay, contrasting colors. Lovely stamped patterns may be bought now, and naturally that is much easier than working over canvas.

The design of this dress is suitable for a great variety of materials, from serge or wool jersey to any one of a large number of lovely wash materials. Silk or satin would also make up attractively.

The center front of the waist is slashed from the neck line to a little below the waist line, and in stitching the facing on it will be necessary to run the seams off at the end to practically nothing. Care will also have to be taken not to stretch the dress at this point. Three or four shallow buttonhole stitches taken just at the bottom and at each side will help to give strength there, and the dress will have to be most carefully pressed.

Pattern No. 1448 is one of those one-piece designs with kimono sleeves. There is a slash made down from the neck in the center back, and a two-piece, round collar and pockets complete the pattern.

Gingham, pongee or chambray would make up charmingly. The pockets may be cut from the dress material and appliqued to the dress with a contrasting colored floss. The same floss might be used to trim the edges of the collar and sleeves, using the blanket stitch—the same being used for setting the pockets.

Pattern No. 1398 is an apron, made to be slipped on over the head. There are two sections—front and back, and these with the pocket, belt and sash complete the pattern.

The sash ends are gathered or plaited into the belt and tie in the middle of the back. These aprons are capable of being made most attractive by choosing pretty materials and trimming. Plain or figured ginghams, percales, prints, etc., are good, and embroidery, appliqued designs or fancy braids will trim attractively.

MY NICEST COMPLIMENT

What was the nicest compliment you ever got? Was it a tribute to achievements, social gifts, learning, beauty? Was it forthright and blunt, wittily done, or something subtle? Write it out and send it to the Compliment Editor, The Tribune, Chicago. One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

Won at Last.

Some years ago I went to a distant city to stay with my sister's children while she took a much needed vacation. The children were really strangers to me, and Harold was especially shy and distant. Finally I won him over.

I think I received my nicest compliment the night he cuddled up to me and said: "I fink you are most as nice as a muvver." M. C. R.

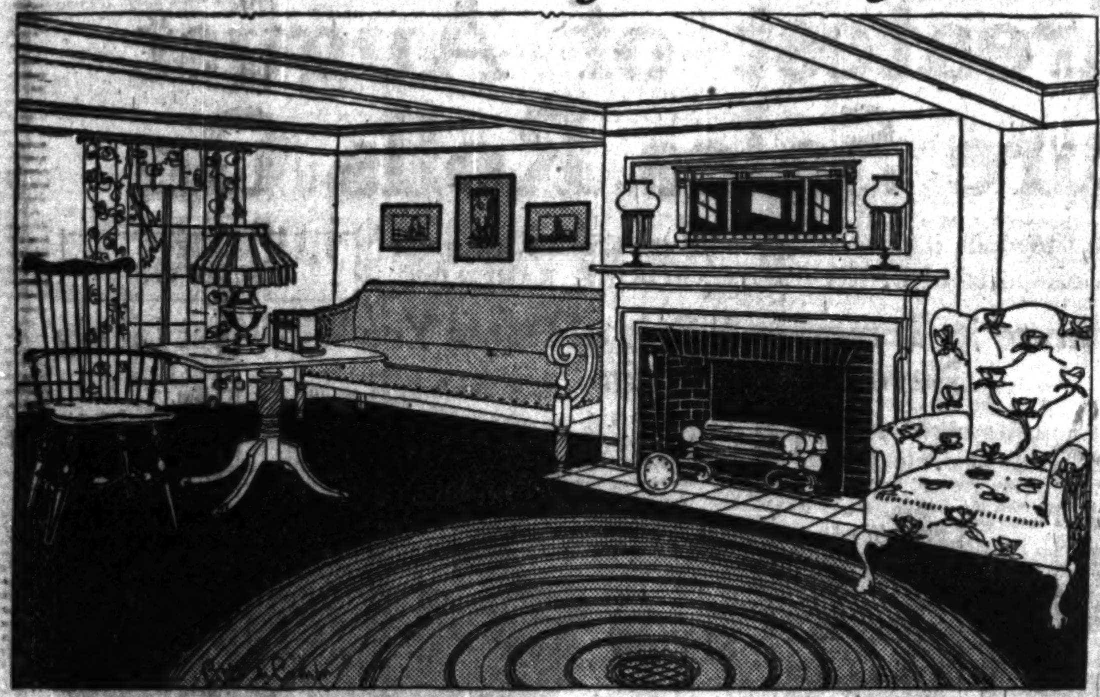
Had No Higher Praise.

My nicest compliment came to me from my son. Next to me in his affections is a big, fat mongrel dog named Tags.

One day the child was sitting in my lap gazing into my eyes.

Suddenly he said in an awestruck tone, "Mums, you have the most beautiful green eyes, just like Tags." G. D.

Touches of Bronze Keynote of Eighteenth Century Rooms



By Anita de Campi.

Anita de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Anita de Campi, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.

GLIMPSES into New York homes and shops reveal a preference for eighteenth century styles. Numerous displays of bronzes in conservative studios lead us to assume that the demand for this exceptionally decorative art medium is steadily increasing. All sorts of articles, from the simplest candlestick to elaborate pieces of graceful statuary, are represented.

In a living room recently completed by one of our well versed decorators touches of bronze add a note of distinction. The room is furnished in Italian renaissance style, with caenstone walls. A davenport faces an open fireplace, the exquisitely wrought accessories of which are bronze. At each end of the long davenport table there is an antique bronze candelabrum. The bases of this pair are so shaped that they may serve as book ends. In the center of the table there is a heavy bronze censer.

Before a window, at one end of the room, a tripod, replete with the charm peculiar to bronze objects, supports a clear crystal goldfish bowl, which catches and radiates the sunlight. In the recess afforded by a triple window, opposite the door which leads into the room, the fine outline of a statue of young Diana, on a well proportioned pedestal, is silhouted against the sky. Other touches of bronze are added by means of hinges and hardware of the double door.

Discriminating New Yorkers are manifesting also a great desire for wrought iron incidentals. It is really little wonder, for our American artisans in metal are rendering articles so exquisitely wrought that we cannot fail to acknowledge and applaud their wonderful mastery. Consoles, lamps, mirror frames, and tables are among the pieces which find the greatest favor.

Colonial furniture, it seems, is most popular. We base this assertion upon our observation of the remarkable decorative schemes that have been offered lately by eastern firms. In conjunction with this style of furniture, wonderful old ship models are being shown along 5th avenue. These are especially dignified when placed above a mantel, or when framed in a wide, short window, high in the wall.

Picturesque, gayly colored, hooked rugs, whose origin dates back to revolutionary days, come in for their proper share of admiration.

Scenic wall papers, so widely used by well to do colonists, are greatly in demand, in consequence of the popularity of colonial furniture. It is true that decorative needs are minimized where walls are hung with an atttractive scenic paper. Other interesting old fashioned papers are those which show all-over foliage or floral patterns; plain stripes, or those which are combined with nosegays, spaced regularly; and those which have a quaint little geometric pattern in white, on a light colored ground. Color toned effects are also in vogue.

Block printed mohair pile fabrics are among the best sellers this season. Chintzes and printed linens, too, have endeared themselves to almost every one. Quantities of these are used in rooms with unfigured wall surfaces.

Typically colonial is the living room illustrated today. The floor is painted deep taupe, the woodwork French gray, and the walls ecru. Particularly graceful and satisfactory is the Sheraton sofa, which is upholstered in Delft blue. The Windsor chair and Duncan Phyffe card table manifest the fineness of line which makes these types of furniture desirable in the living room. Hand blocked linen, matching the draperies, upholsters the wing chair. The background is light ecru, and the figures are in old rose, old gold, and peacock green. Over the mantel hangs a mirror in an old gilt frame. Distinctly colonial are the brass candlesticks, with their shades of frosted glass and prisms. A silk shade, which matches the rose color in the linen, finishes the old brass table lamp.

In an interesting dining room which I saw a few days ago an extension drop-leaf table is placed at one end of the room, in front of a set of six sunny windows which look out upon a gorgeous garden. There is a curtain of chintz, in gay colors, at each of the end windows. A narrow, ruffled valance, on a separate rod, runs the full length of the set, carrying the colors across from one curtain to the other. In order that the view of the garden be not obstructed, the other four windows are left uncurtained. At the other end of the room there is an extremely wide stone fireplace. Filling the remaining wall space at each side is a window, which has narrow, straight hanging curtains and a valance of chintz. Sand plaster is used as a wall finish, and the woodwork is stained walnut. Cunning little chintz pads are fastened to the seats of the Windsor chairs.

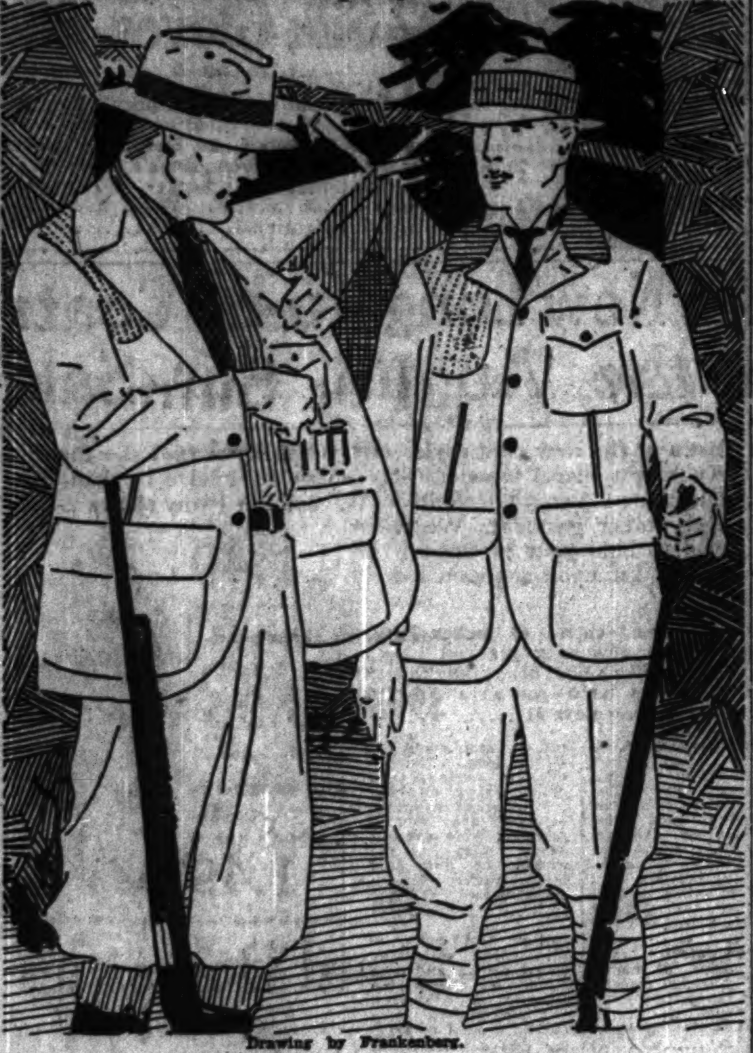
MEN'S FASHIONS



Drawing by Frankenberg.

Inside and outside view of O. D. Melton coat.

By A. T. Gallico.

This department will be glad to answer any questions regarding men's fashions and the correct thing to wear on different occasions. Address communications to A. T. Gallico, Chicago Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped, addressed envelope for personal reply.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—These are the days when the sporting goods catalogues are full of pictures of handsome gentlemen wearing garments of which each piece has a number and a price, earnestly engaged in fishing or hunting surrounded by appropriate scenery.

And to these you will in all likelihood, turn when the time comes for you to choose your hunting apparel or your trout fishing outfit. But perhaps a hint or two here and there or suggestions as to what you ought to take and what you ought to leave behind may save some money and some labor.

Whether hunting or fishing, when once you have tended to your bodily comfort and health in the selection of your clothes, the next thing of prime importance is to travel light. Weigh in the balance every article of clothing or knicknack that you contemplate carrying along with you, and consider just how precious it will be to you when you have some ten or fifteen miles to go to camp.

For a fishing trip you will wish your clothing to combine freedom of action, fair lightness in weight, and, above all, it should be waterproof. There are all sorts and types of fishing in which you will in the majority of cases forsake dry land when you pursue your bite. Hence, waterproof boots will form an important item in your wardrobe, from the knee or thigh length to the trouser boots which reach and protect you to your waist.

Your shirt should be of wool or flannel, no matter what kind of warm weather you expect to run into; that is, unless you are going out for tarpon, and then you sit on back of a boat, clad in white ducks, perhaps, and trust that the fish won't pull you off. For warm weather you can get lightweight flannel that will in the long run keep you cooler than other materials. And as you are sure to get a ducking some time or other, the wool or flannel will keep you from taking cold.

You will, of course, be sticking to neutral colors—especially in your shirt. White shirts will scare the fish. Olive drab or forest green are the two best colors.

Reinforced waterproofed khaki trousers seem to be the best for your all around work. I saw a good looking practical waterproofed khaki fishing coat that was made with an expanding shoulder plait to give plenty of room in case you should find yourself with a fight on your hands, and bellows pockets which are big enough to hold almost everything, perhaps, but the fish that you will tell got away from you.

Your hunting outfit will be a similar proposition to the fishing in that your locality will determine the weight and nature of your clothing. Waterproof khaki is the ideal wear, with short breeches, using either high laced boots or o. d. roll puttees and khaki flannel shirt.

One hunting coat I saw included everything that one could wish from such a garment—wool lined facing on neck and lapel so as to give warmth when turned up for protection against a cold drizzle or rainstorm; recoil pad on the shoulder. There are three outside pockets on the coat and four inside, two of them opening right and left, extending the full width of the coat, and shell loops besides.

Is Marriage a Failure?

Why do so many marriages go wrong? What are the underlying causes of happy marriages? Are there any happy marriages? What is the matter, if anything, with marriage, the institution?

W. L. George, the English novelist, investigated 150 marriages. One hundred and sixteen cases he eliminated as unsuccessful; in five cases the husband was unfaithful; in ten it was the wife; the husband disliked the wife in three cases and in seven it was the wife who did the disliking. Only nine marriage, Mr. George says, were "apparently successful." "Marriage," he adds, "is on its trial before a hesitating jury."

Look over the marriages you know yourself. How many are successes; how many are failures? And why?

The Tribune will pay $1 for each letter published on the question. Marriage—what do you think of it? Address Marriage Editor, The Sunday Tribune.

Must Be Fifty-Fifty.

My husband and I have been married two and one-half years, having been married extremely young, and we believe ours to be a successful marriage. To be sure, we have quite spirited scraps at times, but we soon make up again. Jim is slow, easy going, slow to anger, and patient; I am excitable and have a temper.

Money matters never bother us, for what's his is mine and what's mine is his. Our bank account is a joint one, and I may write a check whenever I choose.

Jim and I know two young couples with whom we go about once in a while. Jane and Tom have only been married five months; gracious! how they scrap and act in public. They slap each other in fun, of course, or so it's supposed to be. He shows no respect for women and she waits on him. I'm convinced they are not really happy, and that theirs is not a successful marriage.

Arlys and Mel, on the other hand, are different. Both are quiet and polite to one another, and they do not act absurdly in public. Yet they show that they care deeply for each other. They have been married a year and one-half, and I know they are happy.

Taking it all in all, I should say it's about half and half. One-half the marriages are successful and the other half are not. I would say if you would have a happy and successful marriage marry young and grow into each other's ways, and before you rush into it be certain you know well the habits and temperament of the other.

And do not be so modest that you neglect to have a heart to heart talk together before you marry, of your beliefs, aims, and ideals of the marriage state, and you will not enter it blindfolded, to be rudely awakened later. Therein lies the most important way to a happy marriage. I speak from experience, for Jim and I had this talk, and never have regretted it, and I know we never shall. We knew each other before we took our vows, and there was no guessing as to what sort of person each had selected. C. C.

Home Outfits

Much thought should be given the selection of furnishings for your home—because a home is not a temporary affair—rather it is a permanent investment. Our 57 years' experience has taught us that it is better to buy fewer pieces of guaranteed quality than to fill your rooms with furniture of inferior materials—or poor design.

Grant us permission to offer suggestions—perhaps we can help you decide whether tapestry, damask or mohair should be used in covering the seats of your dining room chairs—perhaps we can offer a plan for furnishing your home which will save you money. This service, we assure you, will not place you under any obligation. If you care to take advantage of the knowledge we have acquired during our many years' experience, please advise us by phone or letter at what time it would be most agreeable for our representative to consult with you—either at your present home or at any of our stores.

OUR BARGAIN BASEMENT

Please do not think that our Bargain Basement Sections are filled with inferior Home-needs—cheaply made and poorly designed, for that is emphatically not so. We display in the Basement Sections of all our five stores such Home-needs of which our stock is limited or of those designs which the factories have discontinued or sample living room suites covered in materials not to be had any longer.

These Home-needs are sharply reduceed, and if you can find among them the pieces you require, you can be sure of saving one-third to one-half our regular price. A good example is a lot of solid mahogany floor lamp bases at $15,95.

"Peep! Peep!" Says the M. E. Emerging—to Retire

The Best Photoplays of July.

- OUR LEADING CITIZEN.
- THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE.
- THE STORM.
- THE UNDERSTUDY.
- THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK.
- HURRICANE'S GAL.
- THE TRUTHFUL LIAR.
- FOR HIGH STAKES.
- THE DUST FLOWER.
- THE FIVE DOLLAR BABY.

By Mae Tinee.

THOUGHT you'd got rid of me for a while, didn't you? Well, you really have. Only, the lady so ably conducting the corner didn't happen to be seeing pictures last month, and SO it was up to me to pick out the best photoplays of the month. Blame me not. I only do mah duty. (Piffle!)

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," as I remember, was the first production to intrigue. That gave us Mr. Meighan in George Ade's story, and it was a lovely picture from every point of view. It had atmosphere and action and scenery and good acting, and while you realized it stopped just when it should have stopped, you were sorry not to have it last longer.

THOMAS MEIGHAN.
[Apeda Photo.]

"HURRICANE'S GAL" was a whirlwind of a film—effective in a melodramatic, vivid sort of way. It was just one fight after another, with Miss Dorothy Phillips, in the lead, being stormy and tender by turns—but always beautiful. The picture fairly SIZZED, there was so much doing. The big scenes were well accomplished—so well that you forgave occasional faults of detail.

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE" registered as a pretty good adventure photoplay. Jack Holt had the lead, and he did awfully well. I was pretty strong for the director for one reason: After a fight he permitted the hero's face to remain bruised for a time. Usually our handsome gentlemen of the screen appear following a battle royal with no marks of the terrific fray upon them. THAT, you know, is not life.

"THE TRUTHFUL LIAR" was a well acted little drama that gave the blonde comedienne Wanda Hawley a chance to emote. She proved beyond a doubt that she can be sad as well as funny to good effect. George Siegmann was villain in chief. That man's a peacherinolulladewdrop!

"THE STORM" was the kind of picture you'd like to see twice. It was smashing as a spectacle and exceedingly fine as regarded detail. Made from the drama by Langdon McCormick, it was wonderfully well adapted to screen purposes.

"FOR HIGH STAKES." Tom Mix cleaning up the country singlehanded and having the time of his life while doing it. Regular Tom Mix picture. Riding, shooting, roping—"you know how 'tis," as the French Canadian girl says in "The Storm."

DORIS MAY.

"THE UNDERSTUDY." One of curly-headed Doris May's nice little comedy-dramas, in which she was capably supported by Wallace MacDonald. Nothing especially unusual about the plot, but just the same the picture as a whole left you content.

"THE DUST FLOWER" was made from the story of Basil King, and I liked it. Some folks who read the tale couldn't SEE the picture. Be that as it may, anybody with the ability to pretend, anybody who likes the Cinderella theme as a basis for photoplay or story SHOULD have enjoyed "The Dust Flower."

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK" was "a Mack Sennett," and

BEST SELLERS OF THE AGES

By James O'Donnell Bennett.

Thirty-fifth paper—Macaulay's "England," or History Made Readable.

The best-written histories will be accounted the best.
LEOPOLD VON RANKE.
("History of England"; preface.)

I asked [James] Stephen by what mental process Macaulay had contrived to accumulate such boundless stores of information, and how it was all so sorted and arranged in his head that it was producible at will. He said that he had first of all the power of abstraction, of giving his undivided attention to the book and the subject on which he was occupied; then, as other men read by syllables or by words, he had the faculty, acquired by use, of reading by whole sentences, of swallowing, as it were, whole paragraphs at once, and thus he infinitely abbreviated the mere mechanical part of study; that as an educated man would read any number of pages much more quickly than an uneducated man, so much more quickly would Macaulay read than any ordinary man. Therefore it is first and foremost the power of abstraction, that faculty of attention and of rendering up his mind to the matter before him, which makes all his reading profitable, and leaves nothing to be wasted and frittered away.
CHARLES C. F. GREVILLE.
("Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria"; Vol. I., p. 106.)

WE are scurrying up and down the southwestern counties of England with an informed and acute English gentleman named Thomas Babington Macaulay. (He is a beetle-browed man, plain of face and unimpressive of figure, but that face is animated by a searching eye and the movements of that figure are given meaning by a consuming interest in the progress of events. His clothes fit him ill, a fact of which he appears oblivious. His vocabulary is torrential and for an hour he can hold forth with illumination on any topic under the sun. He is in the early 40s and a bachelor, but loves children with a peculiar tenderness and devotion. He is a good walker and the dire roads do not much incommode him.) It is November, 1688. There has been much rain. The roads are frightful. On every hand we hear of defections either accomplished or pretty accurately forecast; in two great quarters—the palace of James in London and the Prince of Orange's resting place in the deanery at Exeter—there are hurried conferences. The western counties are rising and from the north come good reports to the invader's followers. Those followers, jubilant over every accession and steadily gaining confidence, have sung a Te Deum in Exeter cathedral. The king is said to suspect Churchill's loyalty. "No man," whispers our incomparable guide and observer, "no man knows whom to trust or whom to obey"—least of all the king's men, for, he adds, "the material strength of the royal army is diminishing; its moral strength is destroyed." He says this with relish, for frankly, even vehemently, he is a partisan of the Prince of Orange—considers him in this crisis not alone the savior of England but the savior of all Europe. We ask him whether the king in this hour when his throne is rocking will concede anything. Our acute friend thinks not—tells us that majesty keeps repeating that "not an atom" will he yield—"not an atom, not an atom," and declares that he will dismiss the first messenger bearing a flag of truce and hang the second.

Our guide's eager hands reach out feverishly for shreds of news, and his swift-moving, accurate mind weaves those shreds into something concrete and decisive. He says more of the gentry of the western counties, after days of untimely but understandable caution, now are hurrying to join the prince at Exeter, and that the prince, having gently chided their delay, said to them, "Therefore, gentlemen, friends, and fellow Protestants, we bid you and all your followers most heartily welcome to our court and camp."

Our friend, who is a passionate Shakespearean, loves the Shakespearean roll—as if they came resounding out of one of the chronicle plays—of those words.

Each pregnant day is bringing a kind of pageantry of nation-building decisions. In the north the rich and powerful earls of Manchester, Rutland, Chesterfield, and Stamford have declared for the prince. The duke of Devonshire has repaired in arms to Derby and then to Nottingham, and at Nottingham he has said, "The name of rebellion is a bugbear that frightens no reasonable man." Mr. Macaulay rubs his hands, for to his mind that homely but ducal assertion is one of the assertions that make history. The news he is giving us with the liveliness of newspaper dispatch is occasionally supplemented with comment of a noble and stately sententiousness, as when he told us today that Churchill had in truth deserted to the prince, "leaving a letter," he adds,

TABLOID BOOK REVIEW

Last week's composite list of best sellers at five leading Chicago book stores was:

FICTION.

"The Love Story of Aliette Brunton," by Gilbert Frankau.
"The Breaking Point," by Mary Roberts Rinehart.
"Glimpses of the Moon," by Edith Wharton.
"Robin," by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett.
"Simon Called Peter," by the Rev. Robert Keable. New story, "The Mother of All Living," by Mr. Keable, is just out.
"Mortal Coils," by Aldous Huxley.
"Peter Whiffle," by Carl Van Vechten.

NONFICTION.

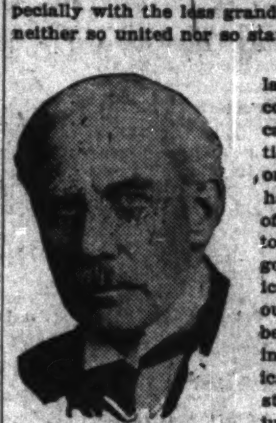
"Behind the Mirrors," anonymous.
"Books and Characters," by Lytton Strachey.
"The Mind in the Making," by Dr. James Harvey Robinson.

AT THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Six books most in demand at the Chicago public library last week were:
"Secret Places of the Heart," by H. G. Wells.
"Adrienne Toner," by Anne Douglas Sedgwick.
"Peter Whiffle," by Carl Van Vechten.
"The Mind in the Making," by Dr. James Harvey Robinson.
"Books and Characters," by Lytton Strachey.
"The Story of Mankind," by H. W. Van Loon.

By Fanny Butcher.

"IN THE DAYS OF POOR RICHARD," by Irving Bacheller, is that almost forgotten thing, an historical romance. Twenty years or so ago that type of story waxed. A few years later it waned. For many years we have had little contact in our fiction with other days than ours, especially with the less grandiloquent days when these our United States were neither so united nor so stately as they now are.



IRVING BACHELLER.

Irving Bacheller's "A Man for the Ages" collaborated with John Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln" to remind us that we once had had an American idol. In our days of prosperity and international repute we had almost forgotten our humble origins. We are like the self-made millionaire. We have forgotten that the odor of the stockyards and of soap and of foxes dead in their traps still clings to our great fortunes, and we had—alas—also forgotten that the fragrance of an unprecedented physical and moral and spiritual courage still clings to our fine old colonial stock. The colonies may have been made up of political refugees, of families escaping from debt, of malefactors, of heretics, of fanatics. But life in the colonies brought out the fine sturdiness of men and women as almost no readjustment in the history of the world has brought it out. Where else in 300 years—but we mustn't get off the subject of Mr. Bacheller's book.

That book reminds us of those days when duty was unequivocable, when honor was loved more than love, when a simple soul, whose wife did her own work and who called the lowliest of his fellow townsmen by his first name, went to the court of Saint James and was beloved by high and lowly alike in France. It is a love story, of course, the tale of young John Irons and an English girl whom he rescued from a party of Indians who had stolen her and her mother, of the opposition of her English father to a boy whom he believed to be disloyal to his king, of the revolution, of the betrayal of Benedict Arnold, and all the time of Benjamin Franklin.

In a foreword Mr. Bacheller says, "Much of the color of the love tale of Jack and Margaret, which is a part of the greater love story of man and lib-

Coming Stage Joys Presage 'Rush' Season for New York

The New York Times.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—[Special.]—Beginning somewhat leisurely and hesitantly, the theatrical season is soon scheduled to proceed with a rush. Plainly this year's timorous start may be traced directly to the experiences of the last few years, when plays of moderate drawing power found their chances of success impaired by reason of too early production on Broadway. The very bad play and the very good play (it must be understood that those adjectives have reference chiefly to their commercial qualities) may come along any time at all with intrepidity—and each will assuredly get either the failure or the success that it is entitled to. But the vast number of plays that fall between these two classes can do with a certain amount of coddling, if not more.

FRANK CRAVEN.

One of the three plays that John Golden is now making ready will come to the Little theater along in September, but at present probably not even Mr. Golden himself knows which. First, there is "Seventh Heaven," written by Austin Strong and tried out in Atlantic City, with highly favorable results in the early spring. Then there is Arthur Richman's comedy, "A Serpent's Tooth," with Marie Tempest as its star. This piece was acted out of town last week and as yet no reliable report of its worth has reached New York; and there is Frank Craven's newest comedy, "Spite Corner," first acted out of town a year ago, and since then entirely revised by by its author. "Spite Corner" will be acted in Asbury Park during the coming week, with Madge Kennedy as its star and with the author filling in as his own hero. Mr. Craven, in fact, will be treating Asbury Park to répertoire, for during the following week he will be seen there in "The First Year," which thus begins its season's tour.

Here's a Belasco Play Mystery.

Treating further of Asbury Park, an advertisement by the sea has it that on Aug. 21 "David Belasco will present a new fall comedy by Avery Hopwood, the title of which has not yet been announced." Waiving the question of exactly what constitutes a fall play, this is apparently a venture not yet confided to the newspapers in these parts. The only new Hopwood play lately recorded is "Why Men Leave Home," which the Messrs. Wagenhals and Kemper have lately been testing on tour.

MADGE KENNEDY.

The week of the 14th, as it is at present constituted, will bring three more productions to town. To the Vanderbilt theater will come "Lights Out," a comedy of the films, which brings Mrs. H. B. Harris back to the producing fold. This play is the work of Paul Dickey and Mann Page, and although the fact has not been widely circulated, it is the same play that Mr. Woods tried out something more than a year ago under the title of "The Red Trail." It was highly spoken of at the time and there was some little surprise that it was not included in Mr. Woods' Broadway productions. The cast of "Lights Out" will include Robert Ames, Beatrice Noyes, Francis Byrne, and William Ingersoll.

On Tuesday, the 15th, a play entitled "Manhattan" will be offered at the Playhouse. The authors are Leighton Osmun and Henry Hull. Mr. Osmun probably will be remembered as the man who wrote "The Fortune Teller," which Marjorie Rambeau acted at the Republic a few seasons ago, and Mr. Hull is known to all and sundry as an actor, at present of "The Cat and the Canary." There will even be a new producer—the same being John Cromwell, who is said, however, still to be ambitious to act in every play that William A.

Nash Leads the World in Motor Car Value

Nash Again Reduces Prices

Effective August 1, 1922

At the time of the last Nash price reduction, C. W. Nash frankly declared his policy of keeping faith with buyers by passing on the savings earned through increased business.

The response on the part of purchasers was immediate and nation-wide. Sales rose to new records monthly and at this writing we are running 100% beyond last year's business.

So again we announce new and lowered prices on every model in the Nash line, and this proves, as nothing else could prove, the truthfulness of the statement, "Nash Leads the World in Motor Car Value."

Chicago Theaters Prepare for Many New Tenancies

THE long silence hovering over many Chicago theaters is shortly due to be broken. Mention has already been made of the approach — chronologically — of Fiske O'Hara in his annual Irish opus at the Olympic Aug. 13; Helen Hayes in "To the Ladies!" at the Grand, Aug. 20, and Pauline Frederick in "The Guilty One" at the Woods, Aug. 21.

But there are others. Word has been relayed during the last couple of days of "The Cat and the Canary," a work by John Willard classifying among the thrillers. Ralph Morgan is coming hitherwards to head a special company and open the Princess with it on Sunday night, Sept. 3. It is now being acted in New York by Henry Hull, Ryder Keane, Blanche Frederici, Jane Warrington, its author, and various others.

Still further word applies to Marjorie Rambeau. She is coming in "The Goldfish," the place to be the Garrick and the time Aug. 27. It is a comedy adapted from the French by Gladys Unger, and the cast includes Robert T. Haines, Wilfred Lytell, Norma Mitchell, George Renavant, Marion Hutchins, and a number of others.

Petrova Opens Playhouse.

Yet again there is talk of Olga Petrova. She will relight the Playhouse Sept. 4 in a work of her own devising called "The White Peacock." One is led to believe from relayed advance bulletins that the play leans heavily upon nightingales and guitars, the heavy aroma of orange blossoms, silver moonlight, and purple bougainvilleas.

Peering still further into the future, though to a time not definitely set for Chicago, Scotia's bard, Sir Harry Lauder, will propound melody and japes for a limited period. His American tour begins in New York Oct. 2 and ends in San Francisco Feb. 17. He will then set sail for Australia and play the antipodes during the summer, returning in the autumn of 1923. He will have an assisting company of thirty and a special orchestra.

Finally, there is a last minute bulletin announcing the arrival of Cecil Lean and Cleo Mayfield in "The Blushing Bride" at the Great Northern, also of Al Jolson in "Bombo" at the Apollo, both to take place Aug. 17; likewise of Leo Ditrichstein in the recently completed dramatic satire by Chicago's favorite dramatist, Ben Hecht, at the Playhouse Sept. 4.

Miss Hayes and Miss Adams.

As to Miss Hayes, there is in Chicago an easily detected interest in what she will do in any play as a result of her popular success here in 1921 in "Bab," which was not much of any kind of play, albeit a good "vehicle," to revive an old cliché of the critics for her especial talents. Each season, of course, is marked by the discovery of "Maude Adams' successor." Most of the young players discovered to be such in the last twenty years have dropped from sight: an actress proof rôle in most cases turned out to be the sole foundation of the predictions, and Miss Adams kept right on as an idol of theatergoers until, of her own accord, she went into retirement.

Naturally there is no sound reason why any actress should win attention or seek success as "Maude Adams' successor." Miss Adams, when her turn came in 1890, was nobody's successor: she was just Maude Adams. And observers of experience and judgment are of the belief that Helen Hayes is just Helen Hayes and will take the place of no other actress among the stars because there is no other actress at all like her in individual appeal. Chicago knows her less well than does New York. Here she is known only for "Bab," whereas there, after her two 'prentice years as Pollyanna on tour, she took away hits out of "Dear Brutus," with Gillette, and "Clarence": hits so personal and unmistakable that George C. Tyler, Mr. Erlanger's associate in her management, felt justified in "giving her the lights," which is a showshop way of saying that he made a star of her.

As to the play, "To the Ladies!" is said to be quite worthy of the two young satirists who caught our fancy last year with "Dulcy." These young men, George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly, are busy enough as an outcome of the success of "Dulcy." They have written "To the Ladies!" for Miss Hayes, have had produced their "West of Pittsburgh," which awaits a New York hearing, and are ready with "Merton of the Movies." This latest is their first essay in dramatization, for the fable they take from Harry Leon Wilson's novel of like name.

"Lightnin'" Breaks Record.

In the meantime "Lightnin'" goes its placid and prosperous way at the Blackstone, preparing to break all records in the history of Chicago theatricals. On Sept. 6 it will cross the line, and on Sept. 16 it will have given 500 performances here. What is more to the point, no date has been set for its departure.

The promulgators of this drama of ground and lofty prevarication turned back the pages of the American stage a few days ago when they engaged Charles Evans as a member of the company that will surround Thomas Jefferson for the use of other communities. If your memory goes far enough back you will remember Mr. Evans as co-star with William Hoey in the bit of fun-making that went under the name of "A Parlor Match." He will play the part of the divorce judge.

Theater Guild Has Dream Play.

The Theater guild has acquired a German play by Paul Apel called "Hans Sunscraper's Trip to Hell," though they say that it probably will not be brought out this season. It is a comedy dream play and the chief rôle, included in the title, is intended for the talents of Joseph Schildkraut.

Frank Herbert, Chicagoan, who a couple of summers ago took the juvenile part in "Welcome Stranger" at the Grand, has been engaged to act the leading rôle opposite Doris Kenyon in "Up the Ladder."

The Dramatic club of Indianapolis desires new plays and will give cash prizes therefor. One hundred dollars is offered for the best one-act, two-act, or three-act play, $25 for the second, and $15 for the third best. The chosen plays will remain the property of their authors, but the awarded prizes will give the club the right to first production. John R. Newcomb, president of the Dramatic club, 4402 Washington boulevard, Indianapolis, Ind., will receive communications and manuscripts.

FRANCES WHITE.
[Connelly Photo.]

Summer time theatergoers have given the mark of their approval to "The Hotel Mouse," wherein the name of Frances White is coupled with that of Taylor Holmes, to be presented in large type. The work is apparently destined to remain in Chicago throughout the heated term.

PAULINE FREDERICK.
(Apeda.)

One of the early visitors who will lighten the darkness now hanging over several Chicago theaters will be Pauline Frederick, announced to reopen the Woods Aug. 21. Since 1914 she has been a star of the film drama. Her return to the speaking stage will be in a piece called "The Guilty One."

Vaudeville Wit

RIALTO.

Page and Grey:

"Are you troubled very much in your neighborhood with borrowing?"

"Yes; a great deal. My neighbors don't seem to have anything I want."

"I'm sure there are many girls who could make you far happier than I could."

"That's the trouble. They could, but they won't."

"Suppose we were looking at a lot of wild animals at the zoo and one of them escaped, who would you save first, me or the children?"

"Me."

"Have you heard the last war joke?"

"I hope so."

"Ah, Mary, you're just as beautiful as you ever were and I have never forgotten you."

"And you, Sandy, are just as big a liar as ever and I believe you just the same."

"I saw a piano tuner go up the steps of your house."

"I didn't order any piano tuner."

"No, but the neighbors did."

Season Promises "Rush" of Drama Joys in Gotham

Brady produces. Norman Trevor and Hilda Spong will head the cast of "Manhattan."

The third offering of the week, indefinite yet as to precise date, will be Mr. Woods' production of "Lonely Wives" at the Eltinge. "Lonely Wives" is a farce from the German, made over by Walter De Leon and somebody else whose name has escaped just at the moment. The play deals with two men who look markedly alike, and one of them is the husband and the other is not. The delicate farcical possibilities of this situation may be imagined. Anyhow, Charles Ruggles plays the leading rôle.

Frank Tinney in a New One.

The dependable Frank Tinney, long announced for the Apollo theater, will arrive on Aug. 21 with an entertainment entitled "Daffy-Dill"—musical, of course. Despite some fears that the title reveals a little too much of the story, Arthur Hammerstein is hewing to the line.

Another musical offering during the week of the twenty-first will be George White's "Scandals." This entertainment had long been scheduled for the Liberty, but during the last week a musical comedy called "Molly Darling" was announced for that theater on the twenty-eighth. Mr. White, at all events, declares that the "Scandals" will arrive in New York on Aug. 23, and there is a hardy rumor that his theater will be the Globe.

Along about the same time Charles B. Dillingham will open his season by bringing the English farce called "Tons of Money" to the Gaiety theater. This piece is now a grand old hit in London, after going begging for a long time. Returned travelers insist that it is uproariously funny and are unanimous in declaring it will be one of the hits of the season.

"Molly Darling" Revivified.

"Molly Darling," mentioned as the Liberty tenant, has Otto Harbach as its chief author. It was played for a time in Chicago in the spring, but will come to New York as a revivified product, with numerous well known players in the lineup.

As soon as "Six Cylinder Love" has rounded out its year at the Sam H. Harris, that theater will be occupied by "It's a Boy," written by the same William Anthony Maguire and said by the sharpshooters to be one of the few certainties of the season. It deals with the adventures of a young married couple and is chiefly concerned with their first born.

From London, to be seen at the Klaw theater on Labor day, will come a Scotch comedy called "Hunky Dory."

Coming Musical Comedy Joys.

To dispose of a few musical productions in a single paragraph, the "Greenwich Village Follies" is on its way to the Shubert theater, as usual, and will arrive late in August or early in September. Secondly, Mr. Dillingham has a new and massive entertainment under way at the Hippodrome, and probably that institution will reopen around the end of August. Thirdly, "Tangerin" is scheduled to remain only three weeks at the Casino, and its successor, also due late in August or early in September, will be a piece out of the same laboratory, "Paradise Alley" by name. And still another September musical offering, of something more than passing interest, will be "Orange Blossoms," at the Fulton. "Orange Blossoms" will bring Edith Day back to the American stage and is the first managerial venture of Edward Royce.

"East of Suez" Also Nears.

With the musical pieces thus out of the way, one arrives at Mr. Maugham's "East of Suez," which is scheduled to take possession of the Times Square theater on or about Sept. 11. This is Mr. Maugham's ventures into melodrama, with a Eurasian heroine and a European hero. The heroine will be played by Florence Eldridge.

Mr. Erlanger, it is reported, is reserving the George M. Cohan theater for his own production of James Forbes' latest play, "The Endless Chain," with Margaret Lawrence as its star.

More late August openings will be "Fools Errant," by Louis Evan Shipman, and "The Old Soak," by Don Marquis.

Henry Miller's theater, as already announced, will be occupied by a comedy by Arthur Richman, "The Awful Truth," on Sept. 20. Ina Claire will be seen in the rôle here. Mr. Miller and his son Gilbert are exchanging courtesies in the matter of theaters. "The Awful Truth," at the elder Miller's playhouse, is a Gilbert Miller production, while Henry Miller's production of "La Tendresse" will occupy the Empire, the destinies of which are controlled by Gilbert. This is the play which so attracted Miss Chatterton during its tryout on the coast, and it will be acted here with Miss Chesterton and Mr. Miller as its joint stars.

Broadhurst's Opening Gun.

Mr. Broadhurst as his opening gun of the season will present "Wild Oats Lane" at the Broadhurst theater on Sept. 7. Maclyn Arbuckle will have the leading rôle.

William Harris' first production of the season probably will be "Banco," written by the author of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," and adapted by none other than Clare Kummer.

Galsworthy's "Loyalties" will be produced at the Knickerbocker theater in October by Mr. Dillingham.

And of course there will be some twenty or thirty other productions before August and September have run their course, but into the field of too much speculation this summary is not supposed to venture. Besides, there are other Sundays.

MARJORIE RAMBEAU.
[Apeda Photo.]

When Marjorie Rambeau arrives at the Garrick in "The Goldfish" late this month another Chicago theater will have moved over into the active column. The play is an adaptation from the French, but is said to have become transmuted into an American story.

FUN FOR THE NEIGHBORS.

An eastern woman is the proud mother of an ingenious child of 7.

One afternoon when he came in about an hour later than usual, she asked, "Where have you been, Clarence?"

"Playing postman. I gave a letter to all the houses in this street; real letters, too."

"Where on earth did you get them?"

"They were the old ones in the attic, tied up with a blue ribbon."

N. H.

One Skilled in Magic.

The new teacher was having a bad time of it. The class was dull—or pretended to be—and seemed incapable of answering the easiest of questions.

"What is a person called who steals?" asked the teacher.

There was no answer.

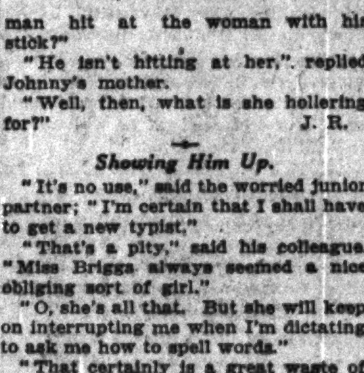
"Now, Herbert," said the teacher, "suppose I put my hand in your pocket and took out a penny. What would you call me?"

"A magician," replied Herbert.

H. J.

She Seemed Frightened.

The celebrated soprano was in the middle of her song when little Johnny said to his mother, referring to the orchestra conductor, "Why does that man hit at the woman with his stick?"



"He isn't hitting at her," replied Johnny's mother.

"Well, then, what is she hollering for?"

J. R.

Showing Him Up.

"It's no use," said the worried junior partner; "I'm certain that I shall have to get a new typist."

"That's a pity," said his colleague. "Miss Briggs always seemed a nice obliging sort of girl."

"O, she's all that. But she will keep on interrupting me when I'm dictating to ask me how to spell words."

"That certainly is a great waste of time."

"I don't object to that," exclaimed the junior partner, "but you see it looks so bad to keep on saying, 'I don't know.'"

H. J.

Sure Enough

The school teacher—I want the pupils to write an essay on London.

She was surprised to get the following from Jimmy: "The people of London are known for their stupidity."

Teacher—Why, James, how do you get that idea?

Jimmy—Please, Miss, it says in our geography the population of London is dense.

A. M.

Knew Just the Place.

The young reformers were having a debate, and when they had agreed that the country was far gone in corruption a grim faced man arose.

"What you seem to want, friends," said he, "is a place where every one has to be good by law."

"That's it," one of them answered. "A place where smoking is not allowed and such a thing as drink is unknown; where every one goes to church and no one need worry about food or clothes, and where every one keeps regular hours."

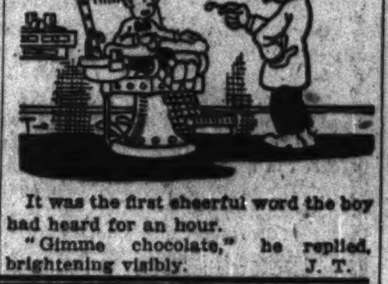
"O, to find such a place!" sighed one of his companions.

"Easily done," replied the grim man. "I just came out from doing a month in one."

G. S.

Too Good to Be True.

"What kind of a filling do you want, Billy?" asked a kindly dentist of a small boy who had been suffering a dozen martyrdoms in the chair.



It was the first cheerful word the boy had heard for an hour.

"Gimme chocolate," he replied, brightening visibly.

Slams of Life

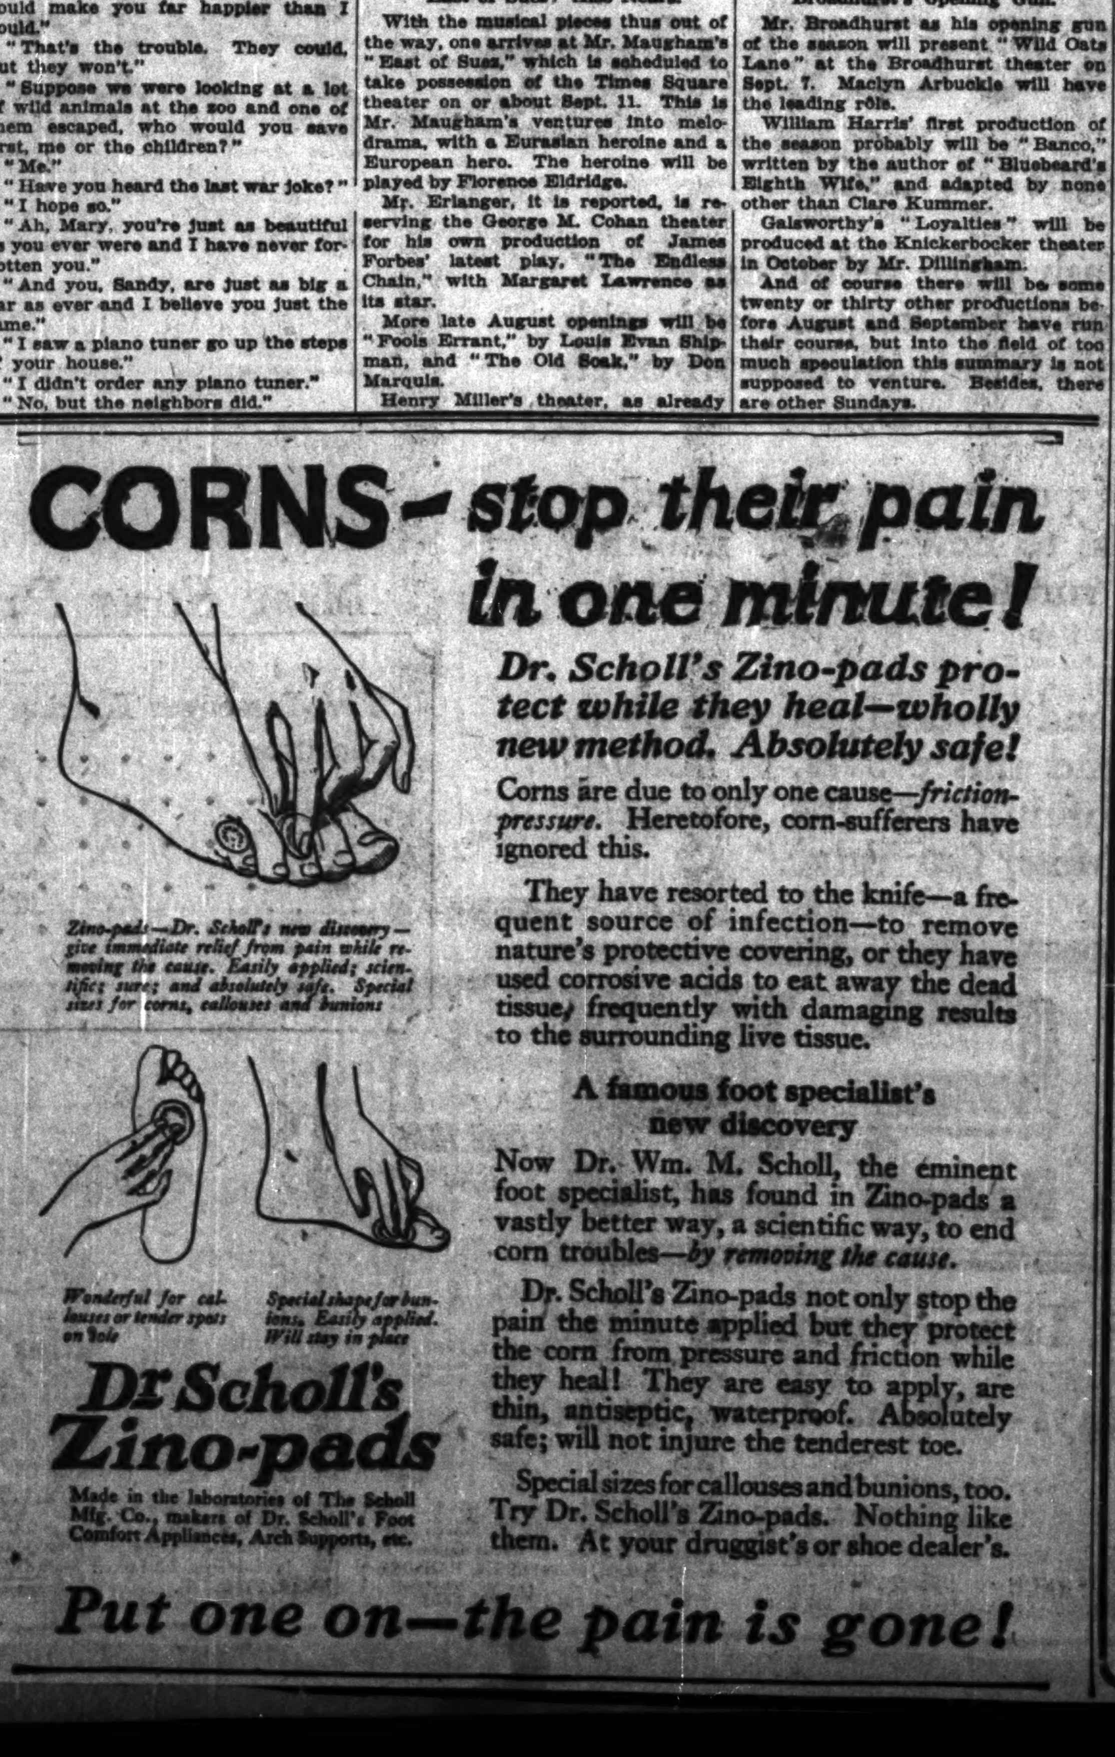
By J. P. McEVOY

THE LAWS.

It seems to me that those who try
To keep the letter of the law,
Are sure of shanties on the eye
And wallops on the lower jaw—
While he who does not care a hoot
Will gaily live in good repute.

The goof who quotes the constitoosh
While breaking it to smithereens
Will live to spread the ancient smoosh
And garner ducats in his jeans—
But he is figured rather dumb
Who puts his bets on Kingdom Come.

So every day the number grows
Of those who dodge the legal maze
And do not even pause to pose
In fitting law-abiding ways.
Small wonder when for any cause
They keep on passing laws and laws
And laws and laws and laws.



CORNS—stop their pain in one minute!

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads protect while they heal—wholly new method. Absolutely safe!

Corns are due to only one cause—friction-pressure. Heretofore, corn-sufferers have ignored this.

They have resorted to the knife—a frequent source of infection—to remove nature's protective covering, or they have used corrosive acids to eat away the dead tissue, frequently with damaging results to the surrounding live tissue.

A famous foot specialist's new discovery

Now Dr. Wm. M. Scholl, the eminent foot specialist, has found in Zino-pads a vastly better way, a scientific way, to end corn troubles—by removing the cause.

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads not only stop the pain the minute applied but they protect the corn from pressure and friction while they heal! They are easy to apply, are thin, antiseptic, waterproof. Absolutely safe; will not injure the tenderest toe.

Special sizes for callouses and bunions, too. Try Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Nothing like them. At your druggist's or shoe dealer's.

Zino-pads—Dr. Scholl's new discovery—give immediate relief from pain while removing the cause. Easily applied; scientific; sure; and absolutely safe. Special sizes for corns, callouses and bunions

Wonderful for callouses or tender spots on sole

Special shape for bunions. Easily applied. Will stay in place was Mack Sennett at his best. It was Mack Sennett sending a chill up your spine, making you laugh like an idiot, bringing you up standing with a handful of straight drama ably done. A picture nobody should miss.

"Peep! Peep!" Says the M. E., Emerging—to Retire

"THE FIVE DOLLAR BABY" was a "Humoresque" sort of picture—only it wasn't nearly so good as "Humoresque." But Irvin S. Cobb wrote the story, and he knows how to write, and Harry Beaumont is a pretty able man at the megaphone. Viola Dana is bright and winsome and clever, and has lots of friends. The picture had many effective touches that delighted those who saw it. By no means a great picture was "The Five Dollar Baby," but I think it deserves its place in the list of "Best Photoplays of the Month."

In closing, I want to speak of the marvelous scenery in "Out of the Snows" and to say that "Grandma's Boy" was not so bad.

Now—Peace be unto you!

KICK KORNER

Dear Miss Tinée: Speaking of kicks, I have just seen "The Man Unconquerable," an interesting story well played and with scenery well worth the seeing. We are introduced to the duena who chaperons the heroine and told that she is "more necessary" than her charge.

But, necessary as she may be, and encouraging to the informed as the assurance may be, she straightway goes out of action and leaves the whole play unguarded. Note especially the parts in which the heroine visits the hero in his office and the last scene in the garden. For the two parties to meet thus unchaperoned would be, in a Spanish country, a thing scandalous beyond measure.

I have been much interested in watching the plays in which Spanish characters appear, and have gathered quite a collection of curious incidents of the kind. There is one in which a Spaniard allows an American, and a new acquaintance at that, to take his daughter to a dance without a duena, a thing not so strange as utterly impossible. Then there is a play by Clara Kimball Young in a Cuban part in which half the action is ruined by the same fault as that mentioned. If offered in any Spanish town it promises well to produce amazement and indignation, and, if the actors were present in person, might possibly stir up a riot.

One of my most curious finds was in a play in which Anita Stewart renders quite convincingly the senorita's part until she has occasion to beckon a friend to come to see something from the window, and then she gives the whole thing away by beckoning in the American way with the forearm, hand palm up. The Spaniard beckons with the palm down, moving only the fingers.

I got another smile from the film which they sent out from San Francisco to advertise the town. It gave a pageant representing each period from the settlement and showed the Spanish settlers with their oxen yoked in the Yankee way. The Spaniard ties the yoke to the animal's horns.

I have yet to see a play in which Spanish characters display in even a passable measure the facile, incessant, graceful, and expressive gesticulation of the true native. With all the large element of Spanish origin in California and New York, it would seem as though the producers might find somebody competent to bring up the action to the mark in this important, if somewhat difficult, particular.

Speaking of kicks, as before remarked, would you like to hear about the twenty-five I found in one of the most pretentious of the releases of recent date? W. W.

(Editor's Note: That's what this korner is for. Kick on until you have it all out of your system.)

BROWSING BACKWARD

Dear Miss Tinée: Left with nothing else to do but browse, my mind drifts back about ten years when I saw "Hearts Adrift," the play that made Mary Pickford America's sweetheart. In that play Mary stole a place in my heart that has never been replaced by any other actor.

Then there was the beautiful Margarite Snow in "Lucile" and "Jess"; Blanche Sweet in "Judith of Bithulia"; Mary Pickford and that manly man, House Peters, in "The Bishop's Carriage."

How about Rosemary Theby in "The Reincarnation of Carma," with Courtney Foote and that sweet faced vamp, Helen Gardner, in "Vanity Fair" and "The Vampire of the Desert," and Maurice Castillo and Florence Turner in the "Fate of Two Cities."

Then later when the motion picture industry lost its baby clothes we were presented with "The Spoilers," with Eyton, Farnum, Santchi, and Williams, and "The Eternal City," with Pauline Frederick. Still later came that pathetic portrayal of Mary in "Vera Crusis," Clara K. Young and Theodore Roberts in "Trilby," and last, but not least, Geraldine Farrar and Wallace Reid in "Carmen" and "Joan of Arc."

DAILY READER.

Dear Miss Tinée: Please allow me to browse backward and tell you of a few splendid pictures which stand out in my memory. In "Smilin' Through" Wyndham Standing was the star. His portrayal of the embittered lover was grand. The picture was beautiful. In "Forever" Elsie Ferguson was like a flower; Wallace Reid splendid. I must not forget to mention Pauline Frederick in "Madame X." ISABEL.

BONNY BITS

Dear Miss Tinée: Did I get your meaning right—that your Bonny Bits department is to be devoted to telling of the good acting done by members of the casts other than the stars? At any rate, here goes!

Take the work of that serious young woman, Miss Charlotte "Peaches" Jackson, who at the tender age of 10 (or thereabouts) came close to romping away with the acting honors of "A Prince There Was." To me the little girl's acting will always stand out as one of the finest bits I have ever seen.

"Humoresque" was billed as featuring Alma Rubens; yet when the picture was shown Vera Gordon, an actress almost totally unknown to me and to many more screen adherents as well, deliberately sewed up the picture and walked away with it. Her work was more than a surprise—it was a knockout!

With all due respect to the admirers of Lillian Gish and other Bernhardts of the screen, I wish to state that I think the finest work ever done in a Griffith production was that of Mae Marsh in the courtroom scene in "Intolerance"—and she did not have to wriggle her ears or her toes to get across, either!

"War Brides" is considered by many to be Nazimova's greatest effort; yet the fine work done by Richard Barthelmess in that same picture started him on the road toward the position he now occupies.

In comedy what could be funnier than the facial contortions of our old Indian friend, Minnie Ha Ha, as she tried on her new hat—and nearly cracked the mirror? JAY DEE SEE.

Dear Miss Tinée: —I'd like to see Julia Faye get credit in your corner for her work in sundry small parts. She's always good. Remember "Old Wives for New" and "It Pays to Advertise"? Julia's there. She isn't a beauty, but she has brains and works hard. B. K.

Dear Miss Tinée: I have been interested in your column for some time, and now may I hope for space in your Bonny Bits corner when I say that the work of Bebe Daniels and Wallace Reid in "The Dance Fool" is well worth remembering—action every minute and plenty of it.

Then there is Norma Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty," which was a wonderful picture. There were no sweet and simple close up views wasting feet of film.

I shall never forget how thrilled I was at seeing Robert Edeson in "Mortmain." That was a year or two ago, but in my mind still compares favorably with a lot of the newer pictures. Wonder where Robert is—would surely like to see him again.

Too bad Mae Murray doesn't like clothes a little more or like a little more clothes. One gets tired looking at form, doesn't one? KAY KAY.

MRS. HELEN WALTON.
[Raymer Studios photo.]

Mrs. Helen Walton will be among those who will have tables at the bridge party to be given on Aug. 14 at the Moraine hotel in Highland Park to swell the fund for supplies and other work of the women's auxiliary of the Highland Park hospital. Mrs. Walton is spending the summer in Highland Park with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Morris S. Rosenfield.

ASK ME! ASK ME!

DODO: Wallace Reid's address is care of the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal. Ask us some more whenever you want. That's one of the things we're here for.

BLONDIE: Perhaps your letter never reached your favorite. Why not try again?

CATHERINE T.: You can address Agnes Ayres in care of the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal.; Nazimova, care of United Artists, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City; Alice Terry and Viola Dana, care of Metro, Hollywood.

H. R. K.: Wallace Reid was born in St. Louis, Mo. He is reported to have done newspaper and magazine work before he went into the movies. Mrs. Reid was Dorothy Davenport before her marriage. Don't you remember seeing her? She played in numerous pictures. You're welcome.

ONLY ME: Thank you for those kind words. Elaine Hammerstein is 25 years old. Bill Hart was born in Newburgh, N. Y.

GARY FAN: Will you please repeat your questions, inclosing a stamped and self addressed envelope for the list of pictures in which your favorites appeared. There's not room enough in the corner to print 'em. Sorry!

D. D.: Address both John Bowers and Rodolf Valentino in care of the Lasky studios, Los Angeles, Cal.

G. S.: We haven't seen your favorite for some time, G. S. When we do get news of him, we'll pass it on to you through this column.

BETTY: Wallace Reid's leading woman in "Excuse My Dust" was Ann Little.

M. A. R.: Yes, Rod La Roque has played in the movies in the following pictures: "The Venus Model," "Hidden Fires," "Easy to Get," "Greater Than Love," and "Paying the Piper." Also in others.

E. N.: Address Eugene O'Brien in care of United studios, Hollywood, Cal.

ART AND ARTISTS

Bearish Market Makes Art Good Investment Now

By Eleanor Jewett.

"FOR years I have been a firm believer in the wisdom of purchasing fine pictures by living artists," said Frank G. Logan, vice president of the Art institute, in the course of a conversation held recently. "Paintings and etchings are being produced by our best artists today that will sell in a comparatively few years for prices that will make present ones look ridiculous.

"I think I love pictures for their beauty and artistic value as much as any one. You are, however, asking me as to the purchase of canvases as a strictly business investment—some might even call it a speculation. If the buyer is qualified, he naturally may buy on his own judgment. If he is not qualified, he can, without difficulty, secure advice from trustworthy experts.

"Every one has heard of the astonishing increase in the value of paintings by artists who are now dead, but you rarely hear of a decrease in their values. For every person who has lost money by buying paintings for reselling, there are doubtless many thousands who have lost by buying stocks and reselling them.

"Taken as a whole, the last few years have been hard years for artists. Art has been at a discount before necessities. The market is, therefore, depressed. An opportunity presents itself today to the wise and discriminating buyer who wants to make investments for the future, in the work of living artists."

Mr. Logan is a shrewd and capable business man, and his word is one that may be relied on. What he says about the market for pictures is interesting, if for no other reason than that that is his opinion. It chimes in, too, with other statements we have heard along the same line.

However, when the market is down is the time to buy. The veriest tyro on the curb could tell one that. But will a picture market come back as does the stock market? Emphatically, yes, and with really more assurance of larger returns for what you have invested. Consider for a moment the following:

Three American painters, Inness, Blakelock, and Fuller, dead now, but not long dead, had during their lifetime difficulty in selling their pictures for more than $100 or $200. A few days ago a canvas by Fuller, "A Gatherer of Simples," sold in Chicago for over $49,000. This is one of the highest prices ever obtained for a picture by an American artist. Recently a canvas by Inness brought $33,000, and a Blakelock not along ago was bid in at auction for $25,000.

To specify one painting, Inness in 1893 sold his "Landscape at Sunset" for $500. A few years ago it brought $40,000.

Other bits of art gossip have their flavor, too. The famous French painter Corot could not earn his bare living with his brush until he was 50 years old, receiving support from his parents. Today a really fine Corot brings at once from $50,000 to $100,000. Cezanne, another famous Frenchman, could find almost no market for his pictures. Less than a year ago a Cezanne painting sold at auction for nearly $30,000.

In 1734 "Bathesheba at Her Toilet," by Rembrandt, sold for $100. In 1913 the same painting sold in Paris for $220,000.

A little time ago Whistler's portrait of his mother was offered for sale in Chicago, it is said, for $1,500. No one wanted to speculate in paintings to that amount and this famous picture went to Paris, where it hangs in the Luxembourg. It will probably hang there forever, as it is held in such esteem that even a fabulous offer would be declined.

These rises in the price of works of art are not confined to paintings. Etchings also advance seemingly miraculously in value from one year to the next. Since 1890 etchings of which there are often thirty, forty, or ever fifty copies have in many cases risen enormously in value.

Approximately twenty-five years ago etchings by Whistler of Venetian subjects sold for $60. Recently a single print from one of these plates brought no less than $7,000. Nor are these advances in the print department of art confined to the work of deceased artists. The colored etchings by Mary Cassatt, an American artist, now living abroad, were published at $30 a print in 1895. They are now difficult to obtain at $300 and $400 each. A splendid collection of Miss Cassatt's prints was recently on view at the Art institute.

There is now in the print room of the institute an exhibit of etchings by Whistler, among others. One of the Whistlers, a lovely thing called "Weary," sold in 1903 for $330. In the spring of last year it sold for $2,450. A good rise, wasn't it?

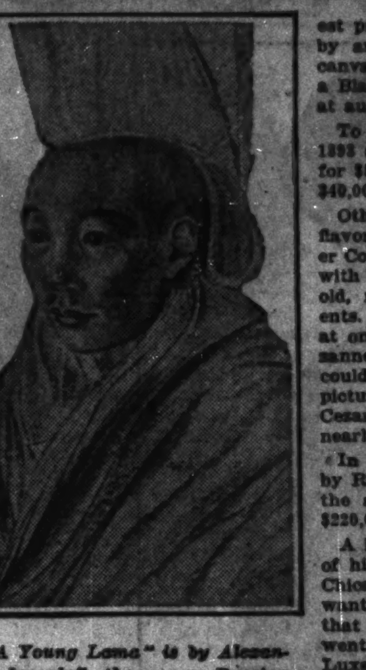
What has happened with these pictures and prints will happen to others at any time. Therefore, when you find a painting or etching you like, buy it today. Tomorrow it may have soared beyond your means. Also, when they do rise in value, that rise might as well profit your pocket as your neighbor's, who bought when you were afraid of your own judgment.

A number of countries are now attempting to put this light into the minds of their people. The starving artist is no longer wanted. An artist honored in his own generation is the ideal marked out by Italy, England, France and America. Societies to promote the popularity of the work of living men are being created all over the world. Other societies to help the individual student to his best development are being established.

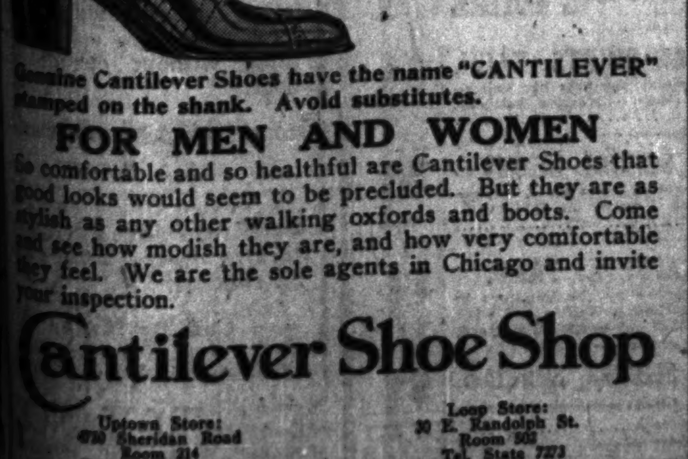
One such in Paris, "Le Bel Esprit," is American in origin. Men, who wish to, join it and pool their resources in behalf of some one young painter or sculptor. He is under no obligation to them. When his training is finished and he gets his good start, he repays as much as he wishes of the loan he has accepted. In other circumstances one man is the good genius of the artist and backs him with the necessary means of livelihood for as many years as it takes for his talent to establish itself. In either case art benefits, through whom is immaterial.

An organization growing out of the war is the Veterans' Society of Artists. A number of well known artists have offered their services as instructors. Among them are Leopold Seyffert, De Forrest Shook, De Young, and Audubon Tyler. Among those who are promoting the organization are Robert B. Harsche, art director of the Art institute, Judge Landis, Mr. and Mrs. George A. McKinlock, Lorado Taft, G. C. Sheffer, and A. F. Brooks.

The Art institute is trying by all means in its power to increase its facilities for giving to the blind some kind of instruction in art. It has been highly succesful in this work during the past year.



"A Young Lama" is by Alexandre Iacovleff, the young Russian artist with oriental leanings, whose work is on view at the Art institute. A flavor of the solid coloring of Roerich, seen a year or so ago at the institute, is evident in these canvases. The backgrounds of many would make as excellent stage settings as were ever achieved by the older painter.



Like a Bandage for Tired Feet

The flexible Cantilever Shoe, with its skillfully designed instep, fits and supports the foot arch without stiffness or restraint. The fit is so close and true, and so gentle and free, that it has been likened to the effect of a doctor's bandage wound lightly but snugly round the instep.

If you are on your feet a large part of the day, either standing or walking, you can realize how delightfully comfortable and restful such a natural support to the arch must be.

Should your arches be weak, this support of the Cantilever Shoe will give you splendid relief while the free muscle action permitted by the flexible shank is gradually strengthening your arch muscles through exercise.

Genuine Cantilever Shoes have the name "CANTILEVER" stamped on the shank. Avoid substitutes.

FOR MEN AND WOMEN

So comfortable and so healthful are Cantilever Shoes that good looks would seem to be precluded. But they are as stylish as any other walking oxfords and boots. Come and see how modish they are, and how very comfortable they feel. We are the sole agents in Chicago and invite your inspection.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

Women Riders the Thrill of Lake Forest Horse Show

By Mme. X.

Before the Lake Forest horse show of the season of 1922 fades off the map, this chronicler of today and historian for tomorrow wishes to record two features of a social and personal interest. It was generally conceded by the organizers of the affair that the most romantic, dramatic features of the show were furnished by two of the women riders, Mrs. Howard Linn and Miss Janet Chase.

The former has only taken up riding since she grew up; the latter has ridden almost all the sixteen years of her young life. Mrs. Linn, though a comparative novice, has made herself a good horsewoman, but up to the Monday before the show she had never tried jumping. Now, jumping is a test of the mettle of even the best of riders and jumping in a horse show is an ordeal for the most expert. Nevertheless, Mrs. Linn entered in the jumping class a horse that she had only bought the week before and hardly knew and, furthermore, rode him herself. It was a piece of pluck which was the talk of the show.

Her friends who were acquainted with the conditions under which she was riding watched her with apprehension as her horse tore down the track towards the hurdle. Her face was very pale, but there was an expression of resolution in her tightly closed mouth and in the way she held the reins and sat her horse which made the onlookers understand why she won the blue ribbon in this class.

None Equals Miss Chase.

The other brilliant rider was Miss Janet Chase, aged 16 years, who sat the various horses of the Peabody stables which she rode as if she and they were one. There were fine riders in that show, seasoned experts, but not one of them had quite such a seat as little Miss Chase. You could see no daylight between her and her saddle when she and her mount went over the hurdles.

Nor would I belittle the excellent and finished riding of such capital horsewomen as Mrs. Austin Niblack, Mrs. James Minotto, or her sister-in-law, Mrs. Louis Swift (formerly Miss Helen Morton, one of the famous amateur women riders of this part of the country).

The two out of town judges, Charles Perkins of Burlington, Ia., and Arthur White of Virginia, said that this horse show was of a high order, both in the quality of the horses shown and in the skill manifested by the riders, especially in the jumping classes.

Well, it's too late to dilate any more on the horse show. Its gallant riders, its fine horses, its gay blue and yellow colors, its festive crowds, the spirited music of the naval station band, and all that have gone into history. There will be another show next year, and later on in this season, just about the time that the squirrels are tucking their last nuts into their winter homes, there will be a steeplechase in the fields near the Onwentsia club.

You and I know there is nothing more exciting and dangerous than a steeplechase. Wives, mothers, sisters, and sweethearts look on in dread and anguish at such a form of sport. But it would be a poor sort of world where men did not take risks and perform dangerous feats of skill, while women looked on in admiration and apprehension.

Summer Prepares to Depart.

Einstein, of the Einstein theory, says that all measurements are relative, even that of time. I wish that he would teach us how to adjust time to such a treatment that a perfect summer like this as to weather conditions could be so lengthened as to be twice as long as, say, a cold, wet spring.

As it is, the crickets have for a fortnight been shrilling out their gloomy message as to the coming of autumn. The goldenrod has been for the same length of time flaunting its yellow banners, pretty but ominous, while there are many crimson tips in the woodbine, which really should not begin to blush for another month. It needs only the katydids to complete our melancholy.

Before the end of the month there will be given in Lake Forest a festival which will probably attract as large a gathering as anything which has been done for a philanthropic purpose for many a season. Mrs. Samuel T. Chase is organizing a big bridge evening to be held at Villa Turicum, the country residence at Lake Forest of Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick. The enterprise to be benefited by this party is the Girl Scouts, an organization which is growing in influence, achievement, and importance. The date is not yet set, but it will be either late in August or early in September.

Additions to the Villal Turicum.

One of the best authorities on architecture I know says that Villa Turicum and its gardens are the finest example of Italian architecture and design of their type in America. Mrs. McCormick has been doing much to improve the place this summer and has plans for extensive additions to the house which are likely to turn it from a villa into a palace if they are carried out as now proposed by her and the architect, Charles Platt of New York. As it is, even now one can notice many changes and additions. Encroaching shrubbery and superfluous vines have been abolished so that the south front of the house stands out in its purity of line.

The twelve termes of Paul Manship, which have been put in the place for which they were originally designed, the water lily court, have already been described in this column. In addition the great field to the southwest of the gardens, which up to now has rioted in its pristine state of wild flowers and long, unshaven grasses, is now being transformed into a close cut, tailor made lawn, the largest in this part of the land.

The interior of the house is, I presume, much as it was when it was originally designed and equipped, which means that of its kind it was quite correct. It was furnished, in harmony with its exterior design, with Italian furniture, tapestries, and ornaments. Its large and stately rooms left an impression of restful simplicity, because they were not crowded with things, though each article that was in them was perfect and beautiful.

It is a privilege for us Americans to be able to educate our taste by visiting a house and garden so completely what they should be. If we can learn, what the Japanese have known for ages, that it is much better to have a few things that are the best of their kind than many of an inferior quality, both as to beauty and texture, we shall have made a great advance.

Gades See the Rebels.

When you read accounts of the revolution in Brazil, don't forget that a former well known and popular Chicago family is right there in the midst of the clamor and shooting. Mr. and Mrs. Herman Gade, who lived here the greater part of their lives, are now stationed in Rio Janeiro, where Mr. Gade is the Norwegian minister. Their recent letters describe their close at hand view of the struggle between the Brazilian government and the rebels.

The Gades' house is on a high hill overlooking the city. From their windows they have a wide view over the harbor and town. They watched during the height of the fighting two forts shelling each other and heard the guns in the main streets of Rio as the combatants fought back and forth. They took in, sheltered, and fed twelve of the many refugees who were made homeless by the street battles. It is altogether an exciting and novel experience for the Gades.

Miss Alicia Gade, their daughter, is with them. Their son, Gerhardt Gade, is in this country.

Promoting Foreign Relations.

A well attended meeting of the Chicago chapter of the Foreign Relations association greeted Maj. Rex Benson, D. S. O., M. C., last Tuesday at a luncheon the association gave at the Palmer house. Maj. Benson served on the staff of the viceroy of India before the war, and afterwards saw four years of active service in France. Since which time he has been military secretary to Sir George Lloyd, governor of Bombay, which put him in close touch with modern India and the problems set going by Gandhi and his followers.

So when he spoke on "Present Day Conditions in India" he spoke with knowledge and authority. Possibly it was this condition of close connection which made him so discreet in what he had to say. He was extremely gentle, circumspect, and noncommittal. He was good looking and likable, if not particularly illuminating.

He is a brother of the handsome Guy Benson, who visited in Chicago a few years ago and who made many friends for himself here. The latter married recently the sister of Lady Diana Manners. Lady Diana made herself so celebrated as Lady Diana that what her sister's name is or even her own married name deponent knoweth not.

The Foreign Relations association promises to become a valuable addition to our many societies for the study of the topics of the day. It was founded last winter by a small group of cultivated men and women who thought that we Americans ought to be better informed than the majority of us are on what is going on in other countries and in this way form our own opinions as to what part our government ought to play in world politics.

A large and flourishing chapter in New York draws hundreds of people to the luncheons at which noted authorities on foreign topics speak. It is distinctly "the thing" to belong to this association there and to go to these meetings.

George Porter presided at last Monday's meeting, and among the hundred or more present were Mr. and Mrs. John V. Farwell, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Linn, Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick, Mrs. Tiffany Blake, Mrs. Charles Hamill, Mrs. Morris Johnston, Miss Angela Johnston, her daughter, Miss Angela Johnston, Mrs. Harry Shearson, Mrs. Dow Harvey, Miss Harriet Monroe, Miss M. J. Roset, Mrs. George Soden, Mrs. Barney Goodspeed, Judge and Mrs. Harry Fisher, Arthur Aldis, William C. Boyden, Dorr Bradley, George McKinlock, and Herman Smith.

The New Type of Woman.

In London, Paris, Rome, and other modern capitals of the world the career of a woman of social standing and fashion is generally considered an avocation sufficient to occupy all the attention and energy of the women who enter upon it. Not so here. There is hardly any prominent social leader in Chicago who is not actively interested in at least one or two charities or reform enterprises, besides having some pet fad or talent to which she devotes much time and strength.

Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank is perhaps the most complete example of this new type of woman. She is bringing up with the greatest possible success a family of two sons and a daughter. She is one of the most hospitable hostesses both in Chicago and at her country place at Lake Geneva, Wis. She is the extremely capable and active head of the women's board of the Lying-In hospital, a board that annually raises a large part of the money required to run the hospital, an institution which stands in the front rank of its kind in the country.

In addition to these important and time absorbing callings she devotes much time to literature. Last year a play of hers, built around an entirely original and interesting situation, was accepted by a New York play producer. Its production was postponed because it was a bad dramatic year. This summer Mrs. Fairbank is busy correcting the proofs of a novel, her first essay in this line, which has been accepted and will be published in the autumn by Bobbs, Merrill & Co. It is entitled "The Cortlandts of Washington Park," and is a tale dealing with life in this country during the civil war. She has been at work upon it on and off for ten years. Without waiting to see what happens to her maiden effort in fiction, Mrs. Fairbank is already at work on another novel, which shows a whole hearted enthusiasm for the literary calling which should in itself bring success.

Having ourselves dabbled in the making of books and having produced two at the cost—to ourselves—of $200 (the price of a trip to Boston to help in the production of the first offspring of our combined brain and pen), we feel that the writing of books should be left to the extremely wealthy and otherwise idle.

Wooing Various Muses.

Mrs. Fairbank, like Harriet Beecher Stowe, accomplishes her literary work in the midst of her lively family life. Not so Mrs. Arthur Aldis, who has left her attractive house and lovely garden in Lake Forest and betaken herself to the classic groves in New Hampshire, where the MacDowell colony, founded in memory of the late Edward MacDowell, the famous American composer and musician, for twelve weeks in the summer offers to poets, playwrights, novelists, painters, sculptors, and musicians ideal conditions under which they can woo their muses.

Starting with the eighty original acres, an abandoned farm, which Edward MacDowell turned into an asylum for himself where he went to do his best work, the MacDowell Memorial association has added to it until today it is a 500 acre tract where, in a carefully designed colony, over a hundred men and women have been enabled to have from six to twelve weeks a year the conditions best suited for their creative work and have returned to the more difficult conditions of life among their kind refreshed and remade.

There are guest houses where the members of the colony sleep and have their meals, except for two or three times a week when they all meet in the assembly hall for dinner. To each one is assigned a little, isolated cabin in the woods, where no one is allowed to disturb him or her. A boy brings a luncheon in a basket and leaves it silently at the door, so that even that interruption is eliminated. The writers, artists, and musicians can work at their leisure and need not be interrupted until nature itself says that hunger is at hand.

Productive, Not Interpretative.

The idea, as Parker Fillmore, author of "The Young Idea," "The Hickory Limb," and other books, expresses it, is to provide a place for a worker "where he can work if he wants to, and an atmosphere that makes him want to." When it was first started, the late John W. Alexander, the famous artist, said of it: "We must do something to put the colony on its feet, for I believe it is one of the most important art movements of the country."

Would-be entrants have to pass a sort of examination or present satisfying qualifications to be allowed to become members of the colony. They must belong definitely to the productive or creative artist class as opposed to the interpretative. In music the composer is eligible, while the singer and instrumental performers are not. The writer of plays can be a part of the colony; the actor or actress cannot.

Entre nous, this makes for the quiet considered as a sine qua non of the colony. In those groves no sound other than the songs of birds disturbs the contemplation of the men and women busy spinning webs from their gray matter, webs in which to catch the music of poetry, or of sound, or which shall reflect the prismatic colors of the painter, or the mystery of the sculptor's art.

It sounds idyllic. We wait for the great American work of genius to come out of the colony. Such conditions as are offered in the woods near Peterborough ought to produce a real American genius in some of the lines especially fostered there.

Notes on the Ambulatory Ones.

The Berengaria (that noble ship, prize of war and rechristened for the wife of Richard Coeur de Lion) will carry among its passengers a small group of prominent Chicagoites, who are betaking themselves thus late to Europe to get the last of the summer and the first of the autumn over there.

That enthusiastic traveler, Arthur Aldis, is again on the wing, having returned from northern Africa and southern Europe only a few weeks ago as we measure time. Mr. and Mrs. David Adler and Mrs. Joseph T. Ryerson are the others of this party. The Adlers are going to England, where Mr. Adler is to join Mrs. Marshall Field 3d in her search for furnishings for the new house he is to build her in New York. He returns to this country in September, while Mrs. Adler stays over until November, spending most of her time in Paris.

Mr. Aldis is going to motor in Normandy with Macpherson Holt and the latter's sister, Miss Holt. Mrs. Ryerson is joining the Donald Ryersons in Houlgat. They have a house there for the season and have been having a delightful time there. Mrs. Joseph Ryerson will return in September, this being in the nature of a flying trip to pick out furnishings for her new house on Astor street, which will be ready for occupancy about the 1st of January.

Aren't Chicagoans the light of foot and heart? Traveling is second nature to the real dyed in the wool citizen of this, the fourth city in population in the world. An ambulatory lot we are!

ANOTHER OUTLET FOR AMERICAN MUSIC—By Edward Moore

U. S. Composers Are Offered Cash and Recognition

RUTH RAY.
[Campbell Studios photo.]

Ruth Ray, a Chicago violinist with sufficient endowments and acquirements to be widely recognized outside her home town, will give a recital at Mandel hall next Friday night. The event is one in the University of Chicago's summer series of concerts and lectures.

LOUIS HASSELMANS.
[Moffett Photo.]

His week at Ravinia as that of an honest batonier! He conducted yesterday's concert and last night's "Le Chemineau," the first time it has been heard in the north shore grove; he will conduct this afternoon's concert, tomorrow night's concert, and Tuesday's "Lohengrin." After that he will have nothing to do until Thursday, when "Faust" comes up for another hearing. He is popular at Ravinia, as both symphonist and theater man, as he was when "in town." When he goes away from here about Sept. 5 it will be to the Metropolitan opera, "where the French repertoire is to be more important than ever before," it is said.

It has remained for a moving picture theater to give an encouraging hand to the cause of American composition, and the hand contains a substantial reward. Balaban and Katz, proprietors of the Chicago theater, are out with the announcement of a competition to be held under their own auspices, whereby the winner will not only have the opportunity of hearing his work publicly performed but will receive $1,000 in cash.

Both, it would seem, are inducements to American composers. Only the one money prize will be given, but other works of sufficient talent will be played in public. The winning composition will have the first performance, and the five entries considered by the judges to be next in merit will be featured in successive Sunday concerts by the Chicago Theater Symphony orchestra, directed by Nathaniel Finston.

There are no strings and but few conditions on the offer. The composers must be American by birth or naturalization—as I said above, the cause of American composition is being stressed—and their works must be for the full orchestra, a symphony, symphony movement, overture, suite, symphonic poem, or any form elected by the composer. It must be capable of being played within twenty minutes or less, and must be submitted within the current year. Manuscripts will be received by the Chicago theater up to midnight, December 31, 1922, but not thereafter.

Recognition All They Lack.

The orchestra numbers 100 men, and parts for the players must be submitted with the score. A work for solo instrument and orchestra is not desired, but if the composer wishes to include the organ as part of his orchestration it can be done and will be played.

A. J. Balaban adds this to the announcement:

"We are confident that hundreds of really important composers are waiting only encouragement to become known to the world. Recognition is the one thing they lack. The prize of $1,000 to the best is, in our minds, less vital than the offer to play it and five others before the music loving public and the competent critics who will judge them.

"We are negotiating with three of the outstanding figures in American music and expect to have their agreement to serve as judges within the next few days. Perfect fairness in judging will be insured by the conditions that each contestant submit the composition with only some identification mark other than the signature of the writer. Place a blind identification upon the manuscript and inclose with it a sealed envelope bearing this same identification and containing the correct name and address of the composer. This will not be opened until the judges have handed in their decisions."

Fine Acting at Ravinia.

Set a fancy into motion, give it reasonable time for circulation, and you will gain, on however small a scale, the tortures born of futile effort [illegible] an appeal to the authors of classical myths, the ones about Tantalus and Sisyphus and the like. Those of us who write for print about musical performances have been trying these many years to drown in ink the fallacy that an opera house used for opera is the last place in the world to see good acting. But somebody in what may be called the moyen-âge of opera once made a joke or wrote a witty paragraph concerning a fat soprano as Violetta or a four-foot-four basso as Fafner, and the joke got into the wind. It is still there.

Deputizing on the drama in Mr. Butler's holiday time, and lacking something new in the theaters to write about, it may be that I am subconsciously trying to serve as liaison officer in the play of major thirds and major words. But I am sure that an observer, even though not a trained listener to music, will in a representative week at Ravinia, as a representative organization of opera, find good, sometimes great, and generally brainy acting therein.

Thus, there was an adventure in lay criticism and analysis when, last Wednesday night, the curtain dropped on the first act of "Tosca." From every corner of the pavilion rose questions and answers as to the Scarpia of Didur as set against that of Scotti, of Baklanoff, of Stracciari, Galeffi, and others in the long procession of baritones who have grasped at the chance of playing this high powered study of Sardou's as entuned by Puccini. If you are interested, you may find out for yourselves next Saturday night that he was worthy of the reaction.

Gentle, Dux, Ballester, et al.

Alice Gentle's Tosca, also marked by certain departures from the statutory impersonation of the rôle, evoked hardly less excitement. If you have paid attention to Miss Gentle in her four Ravinia seasons, you have doubtless gathered that she puts reason into her performances. She is a singing actress, as Raisa is one and as Garden is one and as the lamented Ternina was one, with a flood of temperament under easy control.

If you are among the dubious, go out tonight and attend to such items as Ballester's Figaro; here is perhaps the perfect translation into terms of opera of the mischievous, tip seeking, "wise," and sympathetic barber of Beaumarchais. Attend, too, to Miss Pareto as Rosina, and get a lesson in the Latin doctrine of the drama that a soubrette is not necessarily a waitress or what our forebears called in their playbills a "singing chambermaid."

Or, if Tuesday be your night to go to Ravinia, you will hear a capital performance of the best part of "Lohengrin," and you will get another capital exhibition of good acting in a difficult, because low colored, rôle by Claire Dux as Elsa—in my opinion easily the best thing she has done in the United States. Or on Wednesday night Didur will appear as Archibaldo in "The Love of the Three Kings." I am acquainted with no one present at its first Chicago performance at the Auditorium, nearly seven years ago, who does not dwell with warmth upon this thrilling portrayal of a sightless monarch with his thirst for vengeance upon the woman who has betrayed his son.

Seventh Week Schedule.

Ravinia's seventh week brings another catalogue of new singers in old rôles and old singers in new rôles. Ballester's Figaro is the sole change from the previous "Barber" cast tonight; and there will be no change in the repetition of "Tosca." But a new Lohengrin will be Orville Harrold, a new Faust will be Mario Chamlee, a new Manfredo in "L'Amore" will be Giuseppe Danise, a new Maliella and a new Rafaele in "The Jewels of the Madonna" will be Bianca Saroya and Ballester, and the last named will join with that other good comedian, Miss Pareto, to make fun with the nicotian mystery in "The Secret of Suzanne."

Miss Saroya and Louis D'Angelo, who is good as Henry the Fowler in "Lohengrin," will be tomorrow night's soloists in the concert by Mr. Hasselmans and the orchestra. Miss Marion Rubovits, who came out of the springtime tests in the Chicago Musical college with a prize for her singing, is to be the soloist in Thursday's children's concert.

Here it all is, epitomized:

Today at 3:15—"Favorites" concert.

Tonight at 8:15—"The Barber of Seville," with Pareto, Ballester, Chamlee, Rothier, and Malatesta; Mr. Papi conducting.

Monday at 8:15—Artists' concert, Saroya and D'Angelo, soloists; Mr. Haselmans conducting.

Tuesday at 8:15—"Lohengrin," with Dux, Harrold, Gentle, Marr, D'Angelo, and Ballester; Mr. Hasselmans.

Wednesday at 8:15—"The Love of the Three Kings," first time this season, with Peralta, Kingston, Danise, and Didur; Mr. Papi.

Thursday at 3:15—Children's concert, Marion Rubovits, soprano, soloist; dancing by pupils of Gladys Hight; interpretation of program by Mr. and Mrs. Oberndorfer.

Thursday at 8:15—"Faust," with Dux, Chamlee, Roselle, Marr, Rothier, and Falco; Mr. Hasselmans.

Friday at 8:15—"The Secret of Suzanne," first time, with Pareto, Ballester, and Paltrinieri, followed by Act II of "The Jewels of the Madonna," first time, with Saroya, Kingston, Ballester, and Correnti; Mr. Papi.

Saturday at 3:15—Popular concert.

Saturday at 8:15—"Tosca," with Gentle, Didur, and Chamlee; Mr. Papi.

Concerning the Apollo Club.

The Apollo Musical club is out with another drive to put itself on a safe and permanent financial basis. This is best explained by its own statement:

"That the Apollo Musical club is one of Chicago's greatest cultural assets cannot be gainsaid. It is to the concert stage what the opera is to the dramatic stage. For a half century it has given much and asked little or nothing. However, since the war existing conditions have made it necessary to call upon our generous, public spirited, music loving friends, in order to lift the small annual indebtedness.

"That no great educational movement can survive indefinitely without an endowment fund is a well established fact, as proven by our own orchestra, opera, Art institute, and various schools. To secure the future of this famous old chorus as well as to eliminate for all time the annoyance of repeated calls for assistance, we now earnestly seek your coöperation. This is a purely civic movement.

"It must be borne in mind that all members give their time without remuneration, besides paying a yearly membership fee, and in order to insure the educational value to the student body and general public, tickets have always been kept at popular prices and should remain so."

The committee has as chairman Charles L. Hutchinson, and as treasurer W. J. Klingenberg, and includes the names of B. F. Affleck, Mrs. George B. Carpenter, Joseph Cudahy, Charles C. Curtiss, Samuel Dauchy, Ernest A. Hamill, Mark Healy, Angus S. Hibbard, Edward R. Litzinger, Mrs. Frank O. Lowden, George Lytton, Mrs. Rockefeller McCormick, Mrs. W. S. Monroe, Philo A. Otis, William A. Peterson, George J. Pope, B. E. Sunny, and Charles H. Swift.

Concerts This Week.

The Chicago band, William Weil, conductor, has as concerts for the week: Tuesday at United States hospital No. 3, Drexel boulevard at 47th street; Wednesday, Grant park; Thursday at Illinois Industrial School for the Blind, Marshall boulevard entrance of Douglas park.

The open air concerts at Cubs' park, interrupted this week by the street car strike, will be resumed next Wednesday night. Irene Pavloska, mezzo soprano, and Forrest Lamont, tenor, both of the Chicago opera, will be the soloists, and the orchestra, directed by Eric DeLamarter, will play.

Ruth Ray, Chicago violinist, will give a recital at Mandel hall Friday night.

Chicagoans in Opera.

That these United States, and more particularly Chicago, will not be so much out of the running of the Chicago opera as certain of its anti-propagandists would like to believe is indicated by the last bulletin on appointments from the Auditorium. Three singers living in Chicago have been added to the personnel of the company, namely, Katherine Brown, mezzo-soprano; Milo Luca, baritone, and Herbert Gould, basso.

They say at the Auditorium that since May 1 something over 125 candidates have been given auditions so that they might present their vocal and histrionic claims to positions with the company. The three named have survived the sifting process. There is rather an obvious moral to be found in the fact.

Here and There in Music.

Another theater joins the procession for better music. When the new McVicker's theater is opened, about Sept. 15, it will have a fifty piece orchestra with H. Leopold Spitalny as conductor. He is a graduate of the Odessa conservatory. W. Remington Welch will be the organist, coming to the post directly from the New York Rialto.

Eleanor Painter, the soprano, best known around here for her appearances in plays with music, has been engaged for some grand opera appearances at the Berlin Staatsoper. She will appear as guest artist in the leading rôles of "Madama Butterfly" and "Faust" during the month of September.

Information has gone to New York and back again here that the Smetana Singing society of this city intends to bring out some Czecho-Slovak operas this season. It is also preparing for the Smetana centennial in 1924. The Garrick or the Blackstone will house the performances this season, so the story goes; and there will be six productions, beginning with Smetana's "Dalibor" and including Dvorak's "Rusalka" and a work by Fibich.

IRENE PAVLOSKA.
(Moffett.)

Irene Pavloska, a gifted mezzo-soprano of the Chicago opera, will be one of the soloists at the al fresco orchestra concert at Cubs' park next Wednesday evening. The series was interrupted by the transportation strike, but will be resumed on this occasion.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

The engagement is announced of Miss Katherine Christine Marker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Marker of 4730 North Kedvale avenue, to John H. Maschoff of Hazelton, Ill.

Both Judge and Mrs. Goodwin and Col. and Mrs. Weitzel have departed for the west to be gone until the end of August.

OVERRATED

By Guy Lee.

(Scientists say the salt, magnesium, phosphorous, lime, sugar, etc., making up the average human being total in value about 98 cents.)

When a billionaire leaves his Fifth avenue mansion
To enter his car, do not let his expansion
Of wealth in your glance any worship commence,
For he's really worth only ninety-eight cents.

When a statesman arises to tell you how good
He is, and insists that you certainly should Support him regardless of time and expense,
Remember, he's worth barely ninety-eight cents.

When you vision a beauty whose elegant form
Excites you to flashes, first chill and then warm,
Don't get incoherent and crazy, for, gents,
The lady is worth merely ninety-eight cents.

When the going is easy, and nothing breaks bad,
Don't get stuck on yourself—keep your shirt on, my lad;
Though luck may incline you to think you're immense,
After all, you are worth only ninety-eight cents.

The ego that rules us is purely psychosis;
We are all, as a fact, of the same diagnosis;
And I think science prices us high (no offense)
When it figgers our value at ninety-eight cents.

Everlastingly Clean

SANITAX BRUSHES

The SANITAX will give you even more comfort and wear than any other good brush will, and besides can be cleaned—even boiled and sterilized—every day, without injury to the brush and without time or trouble to you.

Different and better than any other hairbrush, the SANITAX (patented), has no wood to warp, glue to dissolve or metal that rusts. Water runs right through the open metal back, air and sunlight can penetrate every corner. No brush like it anywhere.

Say "SANITAX" when you want a better Hairbrush.

Costs no more than other good brushes.

Worth much more, lasting longer and always clean.

WHY YOU NEED IRON—

To make you strong and "brainy" and put the power into your blood to overcome disease germs

The food you eat contains carbon. When your food is digested it is absorbed from the intestines into the blood. When the carbon in your food comes in contact with the oxygen carried by the iron in your blood, the carbon and oxygen unite and by so doing they give off tremendous energy, thereby giving you great force, strength and endurance. Without iron your blood carries no oxygen and without oxygen there is nothing to unite with the carbon in your food, so that what you eat does you no good—you do not get any strength from it—it is like putting coal into a stove without a fire. You cannot get any heat unless the coal unites with the fire.

The strongest weapon with which to prevent and overcome colds, pneumonia, kidney trouble, rheumatism, nervous prostration, in fact, almost any disease or disease germs, is plenty of good rich, pure blood, strength, energy and endurance, and the greatest energy carrier in the body is organic iron, not metallic iron which people usually take, but organic iron like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples, and like the iron contained in what is known as organic Nuxated Iron, which may be had from almost any druggist. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength, energy and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down folks in two weeks' time.

It has been used and highly recommended by former United States Senators, Members of Congress, Judges of U. S. Courts, many physicians and prominent men.

Over 4,000,000 people are now using it annually. Satisfactory results are guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Sold by all druggists in tablet form only.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

Christian Citizen Institute Opens in Winona Lake

THE eighteenth annual Christian Citizenship institute will be held in Winona Lake, Ind., beginning today and continuing to Aug. 17. The sermons today will be preached by the Rev. James S. McGaw, general secretary, and the Rev. James S. Martin, general superintendent of the National Reform association, under the auspices of which the institute is held. Other speakers will be Larimore C. Denise, William S. Fleming, Clinton N. Howard, Matthew M. Holderby, Sam W. Small, Renwick H. Martin, and Lyman E. Davis.

Preparations are under way to hold the fourth world citizenship conference July 1-8 next year. At that time representatives from nearly every nation in Europe will be present.

The Rev. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist church, N. Y., will preach today and next Sunday at 11 o'clock at the Kenwood Evangelical church, 46th street and Greenwood avenue. Dr. Straton created a sensation by attending the Dempsey-Carpentier fight and preaching against it, and by his public debates on the theater, dance, and other social customs.

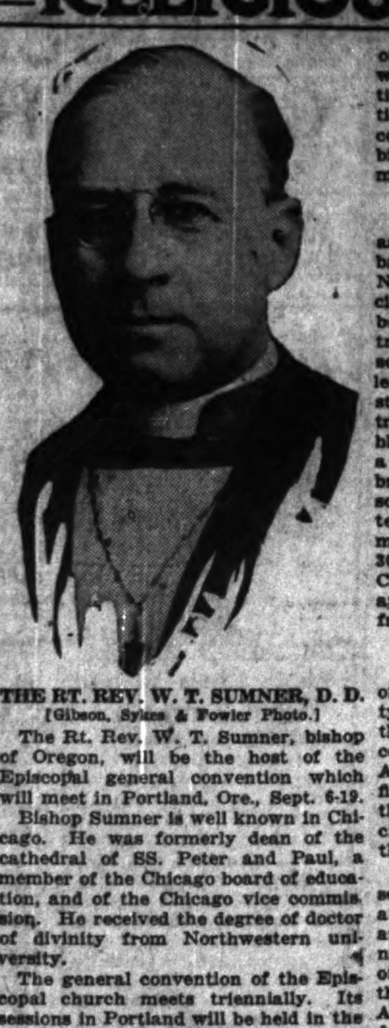
The Chicago presbytery will meet tomorrow morning in the Fourth Presbyterian church at 10:30 o'clock. Because of the absence of ministers on vacation, it is urged that those who are in the city or suburbs make special efforts to attend.

The Rev. George P. Magill, D. D., pastor at Wilmette, who is the moderator of the presbytery, will preside. Plans will be made for the meeting of the Presbyterian ministers early in the fall for what has hitherto been called a retreat. Dr. Magill said they were seeking for a name that would more adequately express the idea of the meeting, which, he said, is not an escape from the world but a meeting for the consideration of the spiritual needs of ministers and people with the expectation that the church in the year to come will make a more definite impact upon the world for its good.

Beginning Sept. 4, the day following Labor day, the Presbyterian board of church extension will hold a conference at Camp Gray, Saugatuck, Mich. The Rev. Henry Seymour Brown, D. D., superintendent, will be in charge.

A retreat for Catholic women under the auspices of the Dominican tertiaries will be held from Wednesday to Sunday next at the Academy of Our Lady, 95th and Throop streets.

A lawn fête will be held on the grounds of St. Dorothy's Catholic church, 78th street and Eberhart avenue, for ten days beginning next Wednesday. There will be dolls, fancy goods, and articles of food for sale.



THE RT. REV. W. T. SUMNER, D. D.
[Gibson, Sykes & Fowler Photo.]

The Rt. Rev. W. T. Sumner, bishop of Oregon, will be the host of the Episcopal general convention which will meet in Portland, Ore., Sept. 6-19.

Bishop Sumner is well known in Chicago. He was formerly dean of the cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, a member of the Chicago board of education, and of the Chicago vice commission. He received the degree of doctor of divinity from Northwestern university.

The general convention of the Episcopal church meets triennially. Its sessions in Portland will be held in the municipal auditorium. For the first time in the history of the general convention, it is said, the arrangements will be such that the board of bishops, numbering 139, and the house of deputies, numbering 552, divided equally between the clergy and lay members, and the women's auxiliary, will meet under the same roof. In addition the Labor temple, with ten halls, and various churches, have been tendered for the use of the convention for committee, exhibition, and class rooms.

Social arrangements include the serving of a lunch to 1,000 in the auditorium every noon except Saturdays and Sundays, and the serving of afternoon teas by the women. Automobiles, it is announced, will be furnished not only for the business of the convention but for viewing the scenic beauties of Portland and environs. Each of the official automobiles will have on it a purple cross, and all deputies and official visitors will wear a purple cross badge.

The convention will consider live social themes growing out of the revision of the prayer book, marriage and divorce, the elimination of the words "obey" and "with my worldly goods I thee endow" from the ritual, and other suggested changes. Whether women shall become eligible as deputies will also be a live issue. International questions will be discussed in connection with the reports from bishops coming from various lands and mission fields.

A call has reached THE TRIBUNE asking the gift of a radio outfit for a broadcasting station at Nadiad, India. Nadiad is not far from the well known city of Baroda, where Americans have been installed in several positions of trust by the ruling prince. The reasons advanced by the Rev. C. H. Conley, who makes the appeal, is that his station is already fitted as an industrial station with men in charge capable of handling and making practical a radio. The minister proposes to broadcast sermons, music, lectures on social reforms, hygiene, sanitation and temperance. Within a radius of 200 miles there are, he says, 400 villages, 30,000 Christians, and millions of non-Christians. It is probably the first appeal for a radio outfit, he says, sent from any mission station.

The Federal council of the Churches of Christ in America, representing thirty different denominations, reports that forty-nine ministers, presidents of colleges, church editors, and Y. M. C. A. leaders, and six women, a total of fifty-five, have gone to Europe, all of them affiliated with the Federal council, although many also represented their own denominations or societies.

Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, general secretary of the Federal council, will attend three international conferences at Copenhagen. He will invite in the name of the Federal council the king of Belgium, the queen of Holland, and the president of France to come to America to take part in the three hundredth anniversary of the settling of New York by the Walloons and Huguenots. If the heads of the nations cannot accept the invitation it is believed official representatives of the respective governments will be sent. The fifty-five ministers, educators, and women who will represent the Federal council will do so with the purpose of creating international fellowship and good will and uniting in effort and spirit the churches of Europe and America.

An international and interdenominational Bible conference will begin today in Cedar Falls, Iowa, under the direction of the Rev. Parley E. Zartmann, D.D., formerly of Chicago, now general secretary of the interdenominational evangelists' association, Winona Lake, Ind. The principal speaker at Cedar Falls will be the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D. D., of London. Bishop Homer C. Stuntz of Omaha will be in charge of missionary day next Thursday. The Rev. E. O. Sellers, formerly of Chicago, will have charge of the music. Homer Rodeheaver will be present during part of the conference. Several speakers from Chicago are on the program.

Stick to Senreco and Your Teeth Will Stick to You

Have White, Radiant Teeth That Will Compel Unstinted Admiration.

Don't neglect your gums, whatever else you do, or you'll be sorry later on.

Keep them strong, sturdy and full of life. Bear in mind that a hearty plant won't grow in foul soil. Neither will unhealthy gums produce good teeth.

Your dentist is one of your best friends—don't forget that—see him often—many thousands of men and women are enjoying health today because of the dentist's knowledge and skill.

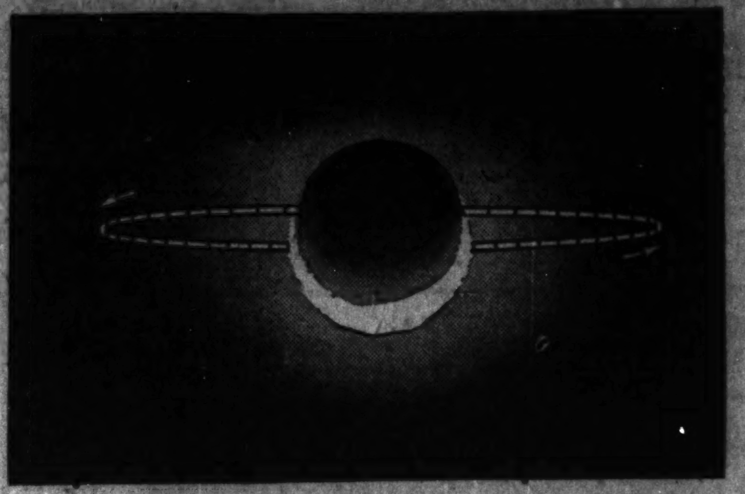
You can have white teeth so radiantly clean and fascinating and so free from film or coating that they will compel unstinted admiration. You can have firm, healthy gums with no taint of disease if you will only visit your dentist occasionally and use Senreco tooth paste night and morning.

Senreco is a dentist's formula, a combination so perfect that, besides being the finest cleanser of teeth and the most enjoyable of dentifrices, is an active enemy of the vicious germs of pyorrhea—that all too common and abhorrent disease that attacks the gums and causes them to bleed, recede and grow soft, tender and spongy.

Get a tube of Senreco today—the good results will astonish you—in just a few days your teeth will radiate purity. Stick to Senreco and your teeth will stick to you.

Senreco Corporation, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ASTRONOMY



Algol and his dark companion. Each star is about as big as the sun.

ASTRONOMY REVEALS LAW.

By S. F. Maxwell.

ASTRONOMY is the science of law. Cause and effect follow surely one upon the heels of the other here as nowhere else; action brings reaction with all the inevitability of nature itself. We all know how constant is the law of gravitation. Every body in the whole universe, be it sun or electron, attracts every other body with a strength depending directly on their masses and inversely proportional to the square of the distance between the two. To this there is not one exception. The laws of nature are not partial, they all apply everywhere alike.

The earth turns on its axis. It makes one rotation in twenty-four hours, and measures out 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, and 8.87 seconds in one year. This measurement of time is fundamental. It does not vary. Because we can depend on it, we build on it. All the time reckonings of civilization are based on this unchanging rotation of the earth.

The earth's strength of gravity is known. Astronomers can predict exactly how fast an object will fall when released from any position above the earth. The accelerating force of gravity, or the amount of motion which is added to a falling body in each second, is equal to the distance a body falls from the position of rest in one second. This amount is 980.375 centimeters, or about sixteen feet.

The path which a falling body takes is also unique. If its distance of fall in one second is taken as the unit of measurement, it falls four times this distance by the end of the second second, nine times by the end of the third, sixteen times by the end of the fourth, twenty-five by the fifth, thirty-six by the sixth, forty-nine by the seventh, and so on, in amounts equal to the square of the time of fall. This behavior of gravity is universal, and from Kepler and Newton derived three laws of gravity.

The orbit of any body moving in a field of gravity is a conic curve, one focus of which is at the center of gravity of the system.

When a body moves in an orbit its radius vector sweeps over equal areas in equal times.

The square of the periods of two bodies moving under gravity are proportional to the cubes of their distances from the source of gravity.

These laws hold everywhere. Double stars can be weighed by means of them. Here is the formula:

The mass of the sun and earth is to the mass of the two components of the double star as 1 is to the cube of the stars' distance from each other divided by the square of their period of revolution in years.

From this we learn the actual sizes of some of our neighbor suns. Sirius, 8.6 light-years away, consists of two stars, one 2.33 times the mass of the sun, the other only .81 as massive as our orb of day.

Alpha Centauri, 4.3 light-years away, consists of two suns, each the same size as the sun.

61 Cygni, 8.0 light-years off, consists of two stars, each half the mass of the sun.

The North Star, 44 light-years away, is a triple sun. Two inner stars go around each other in four days, and around a third star, evidently a dark and heavy one, in a period of many years.

Through the Microscope

Salt forms in crystal blocks.

JEWELS OF THE TABLE.

BLOCKS of crystal are piled up in fantastic patterns. What mason could have chiseled them so accurately? Where is the workman who polished each of them until it gleams, and the miner who located such a quarry of fairy stone?

Nature is the mason who formed these blocks. Nature, whose arts are more perfect than human comprehension, carved the cubes and made them flash with rainbow fires. Man cannot imitate; he can only stand with awe and wonder at nature's work.

Shake out a little common salt and look at it through a microscope and you will behold a delicacy of beauty such as you never dreamed existed.

Business Education
—a modern demand

Modern industrial development has created an intense demand for young men and women of training. The "green" man or woman is a loss, a hindrance to any organization.

Prepare yourself! Take a Business Course

Our practical, thorough course of instruction plus our model office where you gain actual office experience at no cost to you will give you just the training you need. And our Free Employment Bureau will help you find the sort of position you will enjoy.

Bryant & Stratton Business College is endorsed by 100,000 graduates who dominate vast business interests in Chicago today. These men and women are recommending our School and continually call upon us to furnish our present day graduates to fill positions in their offices.

New Term Opens Sept. 5

Act Now! Call Randolph 1575 or write Principal for our new catalog and information about day and evening classes.

"written with that decorum which he never fails to preserve in the midst of guilt and dishonor." He tells us that the king, now at Salisbury, had for three days violent nosebleed and that the three days lost before the hemorrhage could be subdued "had probably saved him from falling into a plot, of Churchill's devising, to deliver him to the prince. He says the king credits his escape to his patron saint. He makes a wry face as he tells us that last, for through and through he is Protestant—as thoroughly so as he is Whig.

What vivid, what memory catching, what amusing detail he weaves in with the momentous tidings of each day. What is ridiculous and what is tragic are interwoven. What is throne-shaking and what is destiny-making—what, in short, is high politics—are entwined with what is merely spectacular, or colorful, or quaint. Do we remember that stupid, fatuous, pompous ass, Prince George of Denmark, husband of the king's daughter Anne, who, there is a possibility, will one day be queen? We do remember the Dane. Well, our friend says, every time news of fresh defections reaches the king and the group around him, George of Denmark says, "Est-il possible?"—that and nothing more. Is that not like him, our guide asks, and while we are laughing acquiescence he adds, "Don't you remember"—his favorite phrase when imparting information—"don't you remember what Charles the Second said about him? He said, 'I have tried Prince George sober and I have tried him drunk, and drunk or sober there is nothing in him.'"

In a few hours George, too, deserts his royal father-in-law. "What did the king say?" we ask Mr. Macaulay. "He said," replies our guide—and begins to chuckle—"he said, 'What, is "Est-il possible" gone, too? After all, a good trooper would have been a greater loss.'"

But later, when the king and the king's family are mentioned, Mr. Macaulay does not laugh. That is when he learns from his authoritative gossips within the palace at London that the king, returning to the capital and finding that daughter Anne also has deserted the falling house, had cried out in the anguish of his soul, "God help me, my own children have forsaken me!"

Still later our guide learns that Halifax in a conference with the monarch had, though at heart as good a revolutionist as any, spoken with respect, even with high consideration, to the fallen man. Mr. Macaulay says he can forgive, nay honor, Halifax for what to some of the king's enemies seems fawning, and thereupon he again charms our ears with one of those sententious and noble utterances that fall from his lips with the dignity and force with which they fell from the lips of the historians of antiquity. It is this:

> What would justly be called flattery when offered to the powerful is a debt of humanity to the fallen.

But not long can he linger to moralize. The march of events is too swift, the actualities of the hour too urgent, the possibilities—nay, the certainties—too important. Those possibilities, those certainties, our guide firmly believes, are to produce effects upon generations yet unborn and in lands widely separated from this restless, tyrant-defying England of this wet November of 1688. He believes that what is happening in these anxious days is to make for the happiness of the men of a remote posterity because it is going to help men to learn the long and tedious lesson of how to govern themselves—not how to be governed, not how to govern others, but how to govern themselves. He believes that, as a step to that sublime ultimate, what is happening in England this rainy November is the decisive shifting of the center of gravity of public authority from the side of kings to the side of parliaments. His hero, his leader, his ideal in this great, this glacial movement of power to new bases is an austere, asthmatic man whom certain great English nobles—risking their heads in the doing of it—have invited into England to rescue England from the plague of the Stuarts as personified by James the Second. That man, William, Prince of Orange, half Dutchman, half Englishman, son of Charles the First's daughter Mary and married to his Uncle James' daughter Mary, our guide was later to epitomize in one of the architectural massings of phrases that he loved as "the soul of two great coalitions, the dread of France, the hope of all oppressed nations."

Amid the excitement of these our Devonshire and Wiltshire days, when we are hurrying with our incomparable guide from camp to court, from Exeter to Salisbury and from Salisbury and Andover to London, when we are standing now by the wayside to watch with the ingenuous eyes of peasants the hosts of the invader marching by, and when—with a practiced and cynical judgment that discerns motives and detects cant and treachery—we listen at secret conferences in the royal closet at Whitehall, when, in a word, we are all eyes and ears and hopes and suspicions—then, with a masterful gesture, our Mr. Macaulay bids us to a close view of his hero as, attended by a great train of nobles and soldiers, he rides through the west gate of Exeter. It is his passion for the picturesque, his delight both in what irradiates and what humanizes history, his joy in the wonderment of the peasant and the roar of the acclamations of multitudes stirred by a grand cause that make him thus command us to the view of spectacles.

But now we must drop our fancy that we of 1922 have been transversing the southern shires or standing at the west gate of Exeter with Thomas Babington Macaulay 234 years ago. We have not been. What we have seen and heard we saw and heard—every bit of it—in less than two score pages of that resplendent and moving Chapter IX. of the "History of England" by Thomas Babington Macaulay, poet, orator, essayist, historian, parliamentarian, who was born in the same year [1800] that our own essayist, historian, diplomat, and cabinet minister, George Bancroft, was born.

Take your stand with him then, through the medium of his book, to see the hope of Europe and of representative government ride by:

> . . . the Dutch army, composed of men who had been born in various climates, and had served under various standards, presented an aspect at once grotesque, gorgeous, and terrible to islanders who had, in general, a very indistinct notion of foreign countries. First rode Macclesfield at the head of two hundred gentlemen, mostly of English blood, glittering in helmets and cuirasses, and mounted on Flemish war horses. Each was attended by a negro, brought from the sugar plantations on the coast of Guiana. The citizens of Exeter, who had never seen so many specimens of the African race, gazed with wonder on those black faces set off by embroidered turbans and white feathers. Then, with drawn broadswords, came a squadron of Swedish horsemen in black armor and fur cloaks. They were regarded with a strange interest; for it was rumored that they were natives of a land where the ocean was frozen and where the night lasted through half the year, and that they had themselves slain the huge bears whose skins they wore. . . . The acclamations redoubled when, attended by forty running footmen, the Prince himself appeared, armed on back and breast, wearing a white plume and mounted on a white charger. With how martial an air he curbed his horse, how thoughtful and commanding was the expression of his ample forehead and falcon eye, may still be seen on the canvas of Kneller. Once those grave features relaxed into a smile. It was when an ancient woman, . . . broke from the crowd, rushed through the drawn swords and curvetting horses, touched the hand of the deliverer, and cried out that now she was happy. . . . Then came a long column of the whiskered infantry of Switzerland, distinguished in all the Continental wars of two centuries by preëminent valor and discipline, but never till that week seen on English ground. And then marched a succession of bands designated, as was the fashion of that age, after their leaders, Bentinck, Solmes, and Ginkell, Talmash and Mackay. With peculiar pleasure Englishmen might look on one gallant regiment which still bore the name of the honored and lamented Ossory. The effect of the spectacle was heightened by the recollection of more than one renowned event in which the warriors now pouring through the West Gate had borne a share. For they had seen service very different from that of the Devonshire militia, or of the camp at Hounslow. Some of them had repelled the fiery onset of the French on the field of Seneff; and others had crossed swords with the infidels in the cause of Christendom on that great day when the seige of Vienna was raised. . . . Nor did the wonder of the population diminish when the artillery arrived, twenty-one heavy pieces of brass cannon, which were with difficulty tugged along by sixteen cart horses to each.

And so on. Clank, rumble, huzza! And that most inspiriting sound in the world—the clatter of the hoofs of war horses! In sentences now as short as the sentences of Tacitus and now as long as those of De Quincey, the resplendent tale runs to 3,000 pages. It covers seventeen years. It is, perhaps, the most gorgeous book of human annals in existence. But what did that unimpeded entry of the asthmatic prince into Exeter mean for us today? It meant the national bank idea; it meant the funding of debts; it meant the cabinet system; it meant genuine constitutionalism. All those beneficent meanings Macaulay brings out in a book which, whether it treats of wars or of economics, may truly be said to contain not one dull line. Its pictorial charm is important because it lures and stimulates; its weightier aspects deserve our further attention.

INSECTS

DID SOMETHING TICKLE ME?

Out on the leaf tips of a sunflower plant ladybugs lie asleep. Each of them has hooked in her twelve sharp little slaws, has drawn her ventrum tight against the leaf, and is dreaming of worlds too full of eatables to be conquered. The sun is warm, the wind is balmy; who would not for a moment at least exchange places with the utter contentment of a gorgeous ladybug beetle?

How was such a satiation of appetite reached so early in the day? Ladybugs usually act as though they were half famished, and search for prey from peep to end of day. Here is the reason. Do you see these chewed remains of aphid skins scattered so freely about? Do you not observe this poor stricken sunflower plant raising its head in hope, and beaming kindly on its tiny hemispherical saviors asleep on its leaves?

The sunflower was plagued with aphids until the beetles came. Great, sprawling colonies covered the drooping plant. Aphids swarmed over its tenderest stems, large red fellows, little half grown vermin, fathers of families and mothers of broods. They sucked, they wagged their bodies, they sought the best the plant afforded there to inject their poisonous saliva.

Ants ran about among the colonies, seeking juicy aphids from which to drink sweet excrements. Ants are jealous of such prizes and will fight to keep intruders away. Some say the ants plant and nurture the aphids for the sake of their sweet "milk"; whether this be true or not, it certainly is a fact that the ants will attempt to drive away whoever would do injury to the "cows."

An ant is busy in one colony; licking here, sniffing there, in ectasy, like a small boy in a heaven of ice cream. Suddenly, swirling overhead a ladybug appears. Her elytra are stiffly spread, her wings beat a low hum in the air, her antennae are reaching for the odor of aphids, her prey.

She plops down, squarely in the middle of the colony. She hitches in her wings, she takes her bearings, she seizes the nearest aphid and devours it. She seizes another, a third comes to an untimely end, hard upon the swallowing of the second.

The ant views the coming of the beetle with anger. She boils with rage as the first of her treasured cows is seized. She dances furiously as the second is crunched. When the third victim is killed she can stand it no longer. She lunges at the ladybug. As well might jaws of wax assail a plate of steel.

So it goes, the ant dancing about in helpless rage until the whole colony is eaten. The ladybug crept off to sleep, but the ant stayed to sadly paw over the chewed remains.

erty, is derived from old letters, diaries, and newspaper clippings in the possession of a well known American family."

And the Second Million Makes Itself.

"The First Million the Hardest" is the alluring title of the autobiography of A. B. Farquhar. It was written in collaboration with Samuel Crowther, not, as most autobiographies of its kind are done, entirely by some newspaper man who wants an extra spare on his small but effective motor.

A. B. FARQUHAR.

A reviewer in a New York paper quoted the movie actor who, when spoken to about his autobiography, said "To tell you the truth, I haven't read the darn thing."

Mr. Farquhar evidently not only has read his autobiography, but has helped write it. It's another Alger book, like "The Americanization of Edward Bok." It is, like that best seller, a reflection of the consciousness of the United States a couple of generations ago when the ideal of Abraham Lincoln was just dying and the ideal of John D. Rockefeller was just being born. Nowadays we still talk about the advantages of being born poor and of having to overcome difficulties, but most of us believe in the bottom of our hearts that the reason we aren't powers and shining lights in our own profession or business is because we haven't enough money. A couple of generations ago it was a sort of accepted fact that greatness was achieved, not inherited. I wonder—I don't know, but I just wonder whether a mental composite picture of the American mind wouldn't register the thought that business—all life—is so highly organized nowadays that success is the result of a fortunate background, a felicitous training, or even a factitious twist, but rarely of the Lincolnian ideal. We have men of power, of wealth, of international repute. But we have so few great men! To return to Mr. Farquhar.

His autobiography is a record of rise of a very poor boy to very great riches. He still had something of Lincoln's determination to rise above his commonplaceness. But—what he sought was money, the new goal. Read in that light "The First Million" is of more than ordinary interest. As a matter of actual writing, it is full of anecdotes and exudes a pleasantness that must make Mr. Crowther happy when he reads it. Mr. Farquhar evidently has never recovered from the naive wonder that he suddenly was a great boy. That is a pleasant attitude for any man to take toward his success—a sort of amused interest in his own growth. Mr. Crowther has helped the autobiographer to put that attitude into his book.

No unskilled writer could have done it.

"The Sheik" Has a Successor.

E. M. Hull, the lady who inducted "Sheik" into American slanguage, has written another book called "The Shadow of the East," which isn't about sheiks and their methods, but about a gentleman who had a sort of Butterfly romance in Japan and lived—through a whole book—to regret it. It is, like "The Sheik," destined for the movies.

Bigger and Better?

Last week there arrived "Who's Who in America," and everybody who is in promptly turned to his or her own piece and admired his or her own self and then looked around to see who wasn't in. Which reminds me of a very amusing skit that Heywood Broun has in "Pieces of Hate" about Babe Ruth not being in Who's Who. And which made me look to see, and behold he isn't. And among the qualifications for admission are: ". . . who have accomplished some conspicuous achievement, something which distinguishes them from the vast majority of their contemporaries." Perhaps the editors of the august volume wonder, with the visiting Englishman, why Americans should make so much fuss about this Baby Ruth. "Conspicuous. . . ." But, for that matter, neither is Bill Haywood in the thing. Nor the late Pop Anson. Nor Ty Cobb. Nor Fred Lundin. Yet the new volume is the portliest of all the twelve.

Men, What Have You Been Doing to Fanny's Type?

Vangie is still extant in the composing room. Last week she ate the first paragraph of a piece about "The Ninth Vibration," by L. Adams Beck, leaving a short and somewhat disconnected paragraph about the story of the building of the Taj Mahal. Luckily a copy of Vangie's feast was also extant. Which is:

"The Ninth Vibration" is a book for the few. It is a series of short stories by L. Adams Beck (who is, I hear, a woman) with backgrounds of India and China. It is written with an almost too exquisite sensitiveness to words. It is esoteric. It is mystic. It is of the far east. It has an enveloping atmosphere of India, of the unknown regions of the soul.

As the author says of one of the characters, "She saw the spiritual essence beneath the lovely illusion of matter, and the air about her was radiant with strange forces." That might be said of the stories. But most readers will feel bewildered at the forces, although no one can but be enthralled by the words which describe them.

GENTLE JULIA

By BOOTH TARKINGTON
A TEST VOTE of subscribers to The Outlook for the best living author gave first choice to Kipling, second to Booth Tarkington.
ALL OF THE BOOKSELLERS were asked by The Publishers' Weekly to vote for the "most significant living American writer." The result put Booth Tarkington first on the list.
THE PULITZER PRIZE for the best American novel of 1918 was awarded to Booth Tarkington for "The Magnificent Ambersons." Again, in 1921, The Pulitzer Prize went to Booth Tarkington for "Alice Adams."
HEYWOOD BROUN said of "Gentle Julia"
"This is a good Book."

ILLINOIS.

Walls, Windows, and Furniture—
these do not make a home, never have and never will. It is the human element that counts—the elevator boys, the chefs, the engineers, the housekeepers, the waitresses and the maids. And you can depend on it, they work but to make your life happy, pleasant and contented, here at the Rogers Park.
Having a good organization, with team work the first aim, is my real hobby, as well as my chief business. And I'm proud of the kind words our tenants speak as to Rogers Park service.
Come in any time, have dinner with us ($1 week days—$1.25 Thursdays and Sundays) and get to understand the "uniqueness" of what we have to offer those who seek real homes, with every comfort that the apartment hotel profession can add.

"The Best in Travel"

2 Cruises Round-the-World

Cuba, Panama, Hawaii, Japan, China, Philippines, Java, Burma, India, Egypt, Italy, France, Monte Carlo

To go Round-the-World with Raymond-Whitcomb is to—

- Go at a time and over a route which has been expertly planned by a staff unequalled for efficiency and up-to-the-minute knowledge of Far Eastern travel conditions
- Go with the concern which has since the period just preceding the War taken more people Round-the-World than all other travel companies combined
- Enjoy an exceedingly generous amount of included shore excursions
- Take in exclusive side trips if you wish without paying for them if you don't want them
- Visit the various places at a time when they are not overcrowded—when you can be sure of adequate accommodations on shore

Sailing January 9 and 16, 1923, on the two new oilburning ships—S.S. "Resolute" and S.S. "Volendam". Rates $1050 up—New York to New York. Booklet on request Executives and Managers.

DISTRICT MANAGERS.

We are now building our staff of district managers for the purpose of placing our radically new automatic and mechanical savings bank system for general use in schools and factories through the local bankers in every city and town in the country.

Our system is pronounced by bankers and educators the most perfect ever devised for school and industrial savings purposes, simply because deposit may be made without going to a bank, yet with perfect safety and in a purely automatic and serve-self manner. It complies in every way with banking laws, for a miniature bank receives the deposit, issues a receipt and retains a deposit ticket.

District managers are being placed in every district in the country. Men qualified for the work should communicate with us at once. Preference given men 40 to 50 years of age, capable of approaching and interviewing bankers, educators and executives of big business; organizing and managing district working force and financially able to operate district agency and stock same with necessary supplies. This is big business, clean cut, high grade, dignified and profitable, with unlimited opportunities.

WANTED—A GENTLEMAN.

The man who meets the requirements of this opportunity will be a salesman of ability and force, but he must be a gentleman first of all.

He will be commissioned as the representative of an organization which is promoting an educational movement in association with one of the oldest and most honored institutions in the United States, an institution with fine traditions and a devoted body of friends who are eager to see the movement succeed; only a man who is equipped to meet the leaders of American life will be at home in this work.

To such a man we believe the opportunity will be as congenial as it will be profitable. The financial returns are not a matter of conjecture; many men are earning very generous incomes and no limit is placed upon their earning power, which is based on an unusual commission arrangement, and grows directly in proportion to the effort invested. But we want CHARACTER first—a man of personality and force, with a knowledge of human nature and the ability not only to talk, but to make his talk result in sales.

Mark your letter personal and address Sales Manager, F 305, Tribune.

MEN WANTED.
$35 TO $100 A WEEK.

We want to train more ambitious men for well paid positions in the steadily growing field of mechanical drawing. Many positions now open with the U. S. government and large private concerns. No need to give up your present work. No previous training or mechanical knowledge necessary. No artistic talent required. We will train you in your spare time at home and qualify you to earn $35 to $100 a week as a trained professional draftsman. We have helped hundreds of men who are now employed by large concerns at excellent salaries. Training is most practical, yet easy to understand and intensely interesting. We furnish drawing outfit and set of drafting instruments. Write today for application blank and Free Book, "Your Future in Drafting." ROY C. CLAFLIN, President, Columbia School of Drafting, Department 1808, Washington, D. C.

CLOTHING, FURS, ETC.

BUY FURS ON THE BEDAL PLAN.
In selecting a fur garment the quality of the skins and the materials used in its production is of most importance; a cheap fur coat does not last; you do not save when you buy for less money because the garment does not last. Bedal's furs are of the highest quality, both as to quality of skins and excellent workmanship; the price is no higher than is consistent with good merchandise and the Bedal Plan of payments enables you to wear your furs after making the initial payment, which need not be made until Nov. 1. Select your coat now during August sales and have it when you want it. $5.00 deposit will hold any garment. MEDAL'S, Inc., 220 S. State, 2d floor, Consumers Bldg.

THE RESALE SHOP,
3429 Michigan-av.
Open 9 A. M. Till 9 P. M.

We Believe

WE HAVE THE LOWEST FUR PRICES IN CHICAGO.

Our method of doing business is so unique and the facilities we have for handling our large business, where we have two buildings on Michigan-av. devoted wholly to the fur business, enables us to dispose of annually a greater number of fur garments than ever would have been thought possible.

Our turnover is so great that the operating expense becomes an insignificant item. All of those things that enter into the cost of a fur garment have been either eliminated or reduced to a minimum.

We own our own plant. We manufacture fur garments from skins that you have the opportunity of selecting. You can pick out your own linings for your fur coat.

We remodel, repair, alter, and store furs. If your coat is out of date or worn in places we can replace and match all worn skins, reline and make it into a practically new garment in the latest style. No matter how badly worn in places, a fur coat with new skins properly matched will make it new again.

You can buy a new fur coat during our August sales and start paying now and have it ready for you when cold weather comes. In that way you have your coat when you want it and do not have to accept what is left in picked over stock when cold weather comes.

We resell manufacturers' excess stock and fur coat samples at very low prices—prices that have made us famous not only in Chicago but from coast to coast.

A visit to this store is a revelation in itself. There is not another like it anywhere. Our location is very good, especially if you use an automobile, as there are no parking restrictions in the neighborhood, and thus you can use as much time in shopping here as you wish. Selecting a fur coat should be given considerable thought, and there are so many different kinds here to select from.

You will find here every convenience, immediate service, courteous treatment, intelligent and honest advice and information on the durability, value and peculiar qualities of all kinds of skins used in making fur coats that will wear and give satisfaction.

We are open evenings during August sales.

We believe that you will be pleased with our store and its stock, its location, and its management, and we also believe you will boost for us as others have done when you see the wonderful values we have placed on sale this August.

We appreciate your reading this ad. We will be delighted to see you and show you our merchandise. You will be pleased with your purchase and we will have made another friend when you come to and 36 years to pay the balance. Why not get out where you can farm the year round? No long, cold, discomforting winters to force you into months of inactivity. Be happy in Sunny California. Two state settlement projects at Delhi and Durham in the famous San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys now under way. Good soil, easily worked, now irrigated. Diversified crops—deciduous fruits, grains, melons, and vegetables—successfully grown. Dairy farming and cattle raising have also proven profitable. The state gives substantial assistance to settlers in erecting buildings and developing lands. Schools, churches, good neighbors, excellent shipping facilities. This is your opportunity for independence and prosperity. Investigate now. No obligation on your part. Write C. L. McFAUL, General Agent, Southern Pacific Lines, Dept. "J," 33 W. Jackson-blvd., Chicago.

OWN A CALIFORNIA FARM.

ONLY 5% CASH

FOR SALE — THE CALIFORNIA STATE land board has for sale desirable irrigated farms, 20 and 40 acres, in San Joaquin valley, only requiring 5% of purchase price; remainder in semi-annual installments extending over 36½ years, with 5 per cent interest. Money advanced for improvements and dairy stock. Splendid communities being established. You can farm all year in California; all deciduous fruits profitably grown; alfalfa paying crop. Ideal conditions stock and poultry. Nowhere else such a combination of waterless climate, sunshine, seashore, mountains, fertile valleys, paved highways, efficient marketing associations, excellent schools. Illustrated folders mailed free on request. C. L. Seagraves, General Colonization Agent, Santa Fe Railway, 901 Railway Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

FOR SALE—CALIFORNIA VINEYARDS ARE now returning $250 to $500 an acre annually; for a small investment now you can own an irrigated vineyard in the heart of southern California's largest fruit and grape district and continue in your present occupation until your vines are in bearing. REAL ESTATE—FARM LANDS.

Michigan.

LAND BUYERS

You can get 20, 40, or 80 acres of rich clay loam land on terms as low as $10 to $50 down, with balance on small monthly or yearly payments.

These lands are close to a thriving little city in one of Lower Michigan's best counties. They are well suited for raising wheat, rye, oats, corn, clover, timothy, alfalfa, potatoes, vegetables and fruits. Stock and dairy farming is profitable here. Cloverseed is shipped from this district in car load lots, which shows that much clover is raised here. The man who wants a farm home where he can work for himself and make good independent living will find opportunity waiting for him here.

We help you get started. Our contract makes it easy for you to acquire the land. In case of sickness or lack of work payments are suspended; you can borrow money on your contract; free insurance is given, which protects you in case of death or disability; actual settlers are entitled to five years' exemption from taxes.

Write today for new 48 page booklet giving full information about the lands and opportunities in this part of Michigan. You will find it very interesting. IT'S FREE. No obligation. Send for it now.

7 Bargains

AT THE

Peerless Motor Car Co.

OF ILLINOIS.

BUICK COUPE, 1921. This is Buick's popular Coupe model that is so much in demand that premiums have been paid to obtain them. This particular one is above the average in condition. The paint, which is a Dark Blue, is in excellent shape. The tires are all cords and very good. Mechanically it runs smoothly and quietly. It has much extra equipment, including clock, seat covers, etc. In face of the reduction in the price of new Buick cars, we are offering this one at a price that is way below its present day market value. Would suggest that you act quickly if you would purchase a smart inclosed 4 passenger Coupe. Special for this sale, $1,000.

CADILLAC SEDAN MODEL 55. This car is coming into our hands in far better condition than the average Cadillac of this series. In fact, the motor runs as smoothly and quietly as a new car. Knowing the owner of this automobile, we can account for its condition, because it has been used strictly as a family car and has had but a very few miles of careful driving. It has much extra equipment, such as an excellent set of cord tires, seat covers, clock, bumper, etc. This car at the price we are offering it represents an exceptional value as compared with the price of a new one today and we believe that it will give service equally as good as a new Cadillac car of this type. Would suggest that you see and ride in this car today if you are interested in a late model Sedan that the Chicago Branch of the Peerless Motor Car Company will recommend. Special for this sale, $900.

PEERLESS TOURING, 1917. This is the second car of this type that we have had to offer in the last two weeks. Just as we predicted, the first car that we offered was sold at 8:00 o'clock in the morning on the day it was advertised and there were many disappointed buyers that, after they saw the car, appreciated the more the extreme value in a Peerless car of this type at the price for which it was sold. This particular car is equipped with an excellent set of cord tires, 1 extra, bumper, motometer, and many other extras. A car that is ready for thousands of miles of very satisfactory service and one that we believe to be an exceptional bargain. We offer it as our special for today. Act quickly if you would avail yourself of this snap. Special for this sale, $300.

OLDSMOBILE TOURING, MODEL 45-A. This late model Oldsmobile touring car is one that is in such condition that we firmly believe there are many, many thousands of miles left in it, without continually spending money for repair bills, as the car is in elegant mechanical condition. The paint, which is Dark Green, is very good. The tires are cords and all practically brand new. It has much extra equipment and is an automobile that is worth, in point of service, many times the price we are asking for it. If you are contemplating the purchase of a high grade economical touring car, this one will surely please you and would suggest that you act immediately, if interested, for at the price we are asking it will sell very quickly. Special for this sale, $375.

NASH COUPE MODEL 6-85. This splendid late model Nash Coupe is coming into our hands in most excellent condition. The paint, which is a Dark Blue, has not a mar or blemish on it anywhere. The set of Cord tires are exceptionally fine. Mechanically it runs smoothly and quietly. It has much extra equipment, such as bumpers front and rear, etc. The velour upholstery shows practically no wear. Owing to the fact that the list price on the new Nash car has been changed, we are offering this car at a price that is in keeping with the used car value as compared with the price of a new one today. A high grade car of this type, in the condition that this one is in, represents a truly exceptional value at the price we are offering it. Would suggest your immediate inspection of this automobile if interested in an economical 4 passenger inclosed car. Special for this sale, $750.

HAYNES TOWN CAR, MODEL 6-39. This is a car that has been owned and driven privately and one that is above the average in condition. Would make an ideal car for either private or commercial work. In taxi service it would pay for itself very, very quickly. It is painted a beautiful shade of Dustproof Gray with black running gear. The cord tires are like new. Mechanically will bear most rigid examination and demonstration. The extra equipment includes spare tire, stoplight, motometer, bumper, etc. This is a very snappy and serviceable car at an exceptionally low price. It is ready for many miles of service without any expense for repairs or refinishing. An automobile that should be seen to be appreciated. Special for this sale, $1,000.

PEERLESS SEDAN, 1918. This is by far the best bargain in an inclosed car that has ever been offered to the public in any make of automobile, taking into consideration the number of miles driven, paint, tires, and mechanical condition. The actual value, based on the number of miles of actual driving left in a high grade car of this type, is worth far in excess of what we are asking for it. You could not duplicate the quality of this merchandise if you would invest a like sum in any new car, and we know that you could not duplicate this value in a used one. In appointments and equipment it is very complete, with such items as seat covers, motometer, bumper, and, in fact, everything that goes to make up a complete and well equipped car. If you are contemplating the purchase of a high grade used Sedan do not fail to see this car, as it will undoubtedly be sold to the first person who sees it. Special for this sale, $750.

CHANDLER

To aid in stopping misrepresentation as to year and model of used Chandler cars offered for sale in Chicago, we invite you to phone us at Victory 8200, giving the serial No. of the used Chandler offered for sale and get the correct year and model information. THIS SERVICE IS FREE FOR THE ASKING.

CHANDLER 1921 SEDAN. This 7 passenger sedan represents one of the best closed car buys we have been able to offer. Here is a car that presents the appearance of new. Black enameled hood and fenders with blue and black body, just refinished. Upholstery of striped velour in excellent condition; in fact, every detail of this car will please a discriminating buyer. This is the first late model sedan we have offered in the last three months. Entire car has received a thorough mechanical overhauling. The equipment includes a new set of cord tires. If interested we advise that you call at your earliest convenience. Special today, $1,525.

CHANDLER DISPATCH. This car traded in by original owner has only been driven 8,779 miles in Chicago. Seldom, if ever, have we received a car in such wonderful condition. Every detail has received unusual care. Has had mechanical inspection every thousand miles and Simonized every thirty days. The original factory finish is as good today as when new. The operation and condition of car is in keeping with its appearance. Car is equipped with front spring bumper, spot light, motometer, lock and spare tire, with cover. The serial no. is 100,539, which classes the car as very late 1920. This is an unusual value and will almost certainly be purchased on sight. We recommend prompt action if interested. $875.

LIBERTY SEDAN, 1920. This beautiful light 5 pass. car has been put in unusually good condition. Is equipped with Wisconsin motor almost identical with present model. Every detail of this car will lead you to expect a much higher price. Coach work in exceptionally clean condition. Just repainted deep blue. Specially priced at $875.

LEXINGTON 1921 SPORT MODEL. Here without doubt is an exceptional opportunity to get an inside price on a completely equipped car. This car has acquired a reputation for snappy performance as well as beautiful lines. The condition is above reproach, both as to coach work and mechanically. Driven about 6,000 miles. Two heavy nickeled bumpers. Motometer with lock, windshield visor, side wings, rear view mirror, thief lock, 5 almost new cord tires. Special at $925.

OLDS TOURING, SERIAL No. 5401. This Model 45-B was sold new in 1920; it was traded in on a new Cleveland sedan by the original owner. The mechanical condition of this car has always received specially good attention; tires are all good; top and upholstery very good; paint is fair. Car is offered specially priced as it stands at $650.

STUDEBAKER 5 PASS. TOURING. This is a 1919 car with transmission mounted on motor. This is the latest 4 cyl. model. Original factory finish, top, upholstery, tires very good. Mechanically as good as ever. Equipment also includes an expensive winter inclosure, which can be taken off in warm weather. Price extremely reasonable, $395.

HUDSON SUPER SIX TOURING, MODEL H. This car comes from the original owner. Is equipped with removable winter top and standard summer touring top. Painted a dark green; five very good tires. The general condition of the car is such as to make it a very attractive buy at our price, $375.

BRADLEY TOURING, 1921. This is a fairly light weight 5 pass. touring car. Top, upholstery, tires, etc., very good. Original finish. Four cyl. Lycoming motor with Westinghouse electric equipment. This is a much better buy than a low priced new car. Special, $485.

CHEVROLET SEDAN, F. B., 1919. This model is generally conceded by the trade to be their best model. Velour upholstery, mechanical condition excellent. This is a very good buy for some one who is interested in a roomy 5 passenger closed car. Specially priced at $425.

REO TOURING, 1917. This is one of the most dependable and comfortable 4 cylinder 5 passenger cars on the street; condition is very good throughout; every detail is far above the average. Priced specially at $275.

PACKARD

STEARNS-KNIGHT TOURING CAR. 1920 MODEL. This car was traded in by one of our branches in the smaller cities and consequently the car has had considerably less mileage than it would normally have had. It is in the original finish [Dark Maroon], is equipped with a very fine set of cord tires and mechanically it is such that it can be put into immediate service. We are very fortunate in being able to offer this car at the extremely low price of $900.

MARMON 1922 DE LUXE SPORT. This car could be sold for new, as it has only been driven a short time. It is specially painted in Light Blue and most completely equipped, with 2 spare tires, front and rear bumpers, six wire wheels, touring trunk, shock absorbers, etc. Anyone contemplating the purchase of a new Marmon can effect a wonderful saving at our price of $2,750.

FRANKLIN SEDAN, 1921 MODEL. This car has only been driven 7,800 miles and is in wonderful condition throughout. It is painted in Dark Brunswick Green, the upholstery shows no signs of use, and the original Cord tires should be good for an additional ten or twelve thousand miles. The equipment includes wire wheels, bumper, spare tire, etc. Price, $2,000.

CHANDLER COUPE, 1920 MODEL. This car is in considerably above the average condition, as it had comparatively low mileage and has been extremely well cared for. The equipment includes an excellent set of cord tires, bumper, spare tire, etc. The car is painted in Dark Blue and upholstered in gray silk velour. We believe it offers an excellent value at $1,000.

CADILLAC SUBURBAN, TYPE 57. This is a large, roomy seven passenger sedan. We accepted it in trade from the original owner, who kept it in excellent condition at all times. The paint is practically new, gray velour upholstery shows no signs of wear, and the equipment is most complete. An excellent value at $2,000.

HAYNES SEDAN, 1920 MODEL. This car has just come out of our Paint Shop. Refinished in dark blue. It is in exceptionally fine mechanical condition and most completely equipped. We are offering it at the exceptionally low price of $1,250.

PACKARD SINGLE SIX SEDAN. This car has just been completed in our Rebuilding Shops. It is newly painted in standard Packard Blue, and shows no signs of wear in any particular. This car will carry the standard Packard new car warranty and service and represents an unexcelled value at our price of $2,750.

PACKARD TWIN SIX CUSTOM BUILT CABRIOLET. This is a high class 3 passenger enclosed car that will appeal particularly to anyone desiring a smart appearing car of small carrying capacity. The chassis is of the current model and the body is by C. P. Kimball & Company. This car will be serviced and guaranteed the same as new Packard cars. This is a remarkable value at $4,000.
